War of Words

By Hedley Donovan.

Charges of "slacker" and "liar" were traded in the Senate yesterday as the dynamite in the conscription issue exploded in both houses of Congress.

The Senate, jumping the gun for the second successive day, brushed aside President Roosevelt's mobilization plan for the National Guard to plunge into wild debate on the Burke-Wadsworth draft bill, which is not scheduled to come up for formal consideration until tomorrow.

Meanwhile, the House Military Affairs Committee broke off discussion of the bill in angry controversy over an assertion by Representative Faddis (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, that opposition to the draft is inspired by "Fifth Columnists" and Nazi agents.

Rush Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, opened the stormy Senate exchange with a charge that the Burke-Wadsworth bill was drafted by "dollar patriots" in Wall Street banks and law offices, who are ready "to sacrifice American boys abroad if necessary" to protect their investments.

Tempering to his feet in angry rebuttal, Senator Minton (Democrat), of Indiana, shouted that he is "tired of lectures on patriotism from a slacker family." He charged that Holt's father had urged West Virginians not to grow food during the World War "to send to me and my comrades in France" and that Holt's older brother "was sent to South America to hide away from the draft."

Galleries Cheer Holt

Holt stirred noisy cheering in the galleries when he branded Minton's accusations "malicious lies." Senator Russell (Democrat), of Georgia, acting presiding officer, announced that he would give spectators "one more chance" before ordering the galleries cleared.

"Whenever the Administration wants to get fifth and gutter mud thrown, they have no trouble getting the Senator from Indiana to do it," Holt cried.

"And whenever Hitler wants it done, he gets the Senator from West Virginia," snapped Minton.

Majority Leader Barkley invoked a rule forbidding Senators to "impugn" the motives of their colleagues.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 6.—Dr. William Mann, director of National Zoological Park in Washington, tonight left this port for home on the last lap of a wild animal collecting expedition whose adventures shaded the most lulu of Nelson. Weak from fighting the intense gnawing of tropical malaria, Dr. Mann, accompanied by his wife, had to be assisted aboard the Norfolk-Washington boat after inspecting the loading for Washington's Zoo of 300 animals collected in West Africa.

Some of the specimens were aboard the same steamer. The remainder had been shipped to Washington by train a few hours earlier. They reached Norfolk, with Mrs. Mann and Ralph Norris, third member of the Smithsonian-Pirestone expedition to Liberia, at 8 o'clock this morning aboard the freighter West Irmo after a 22-day transatlantic voyage.

The expedition's leader himself was missing from the ocean tramp when she docked here with her cargo of wild beasts and mahogany. Against his wishes, protesting that he wished to see the strange Odyssey through, Dr. Mann had been transferred at midnight to a Coast Guard cutter at midnight and rushed to the United States Marine Hospital at Norfolk for examination and treatment.

Many Rare Specimens

This emergency measure capped a series of climaxes on an expedition which began when the Manns sailed from New York on February 17 and which will enrich the Washington zoo collection by scores of specimens rarely seen in captivity.

Among them are six duiker antelopes and four chevrolins, or water deer; a giant rat, first ever to be exhibited in the National Capital; a ratel, which is a badger-like beast so bold that it will attack a leopard; two pygmy hippopotamuses, or a baby and the other fully grown; a monkey-eating eagle; a ocell of deadly gibbon vipers, rhinoceros vipers and cobras, and a potto, which is a grotesque-looking member of the lemur family.

Defense Booms U. S. Pay Roll In Washington to 150,000

By Edward Ryan

Post Staff Writer

National defense work has boomed Government employment in Washington close to 150,000 this summer, reports from Federal agencies and business spokesmen indicated yesterday.

This figure, culled from official reports and the estimates of officials in key defense agencies, includes legislators and office clerks, military men assigned to Washington and civilian Navy Yard mechanics—and mostly an expanding army of Government workers in the executive agencies.

Normally, the Government can predict confidently that its employment figures for today, or even tomorrow, will be announced officially in about six weeks, and with its employment records for the past seven years it can forecast that Federal jobs in Washington will increase at a rate of 300 to 1,000 a month.

The defense program, however, has scrapped the records as a reliable job barometer.

In May, first month of the new defense program, employees of executive agencies in the District increased by 1,200 persons. In June, according to reliable estimates, the rate of increase was more than trebled, and the executive agencies are reported to have added about 4,000 people to their rolls.

This increase would bring the total employees in the Washington

House Action On Summers Bill Assured

Author of Measure For D. C. National Representation Will Seek Right of Way

By Robert T. DeVore

Early debate on legislation to give the District representation in Congress was virtually assured last night as Representative Hattin W. Summers (Democrat), of Texas, arranged to plead before the Rules Committee for a special rule to bring a resolution to the House floor.

Representative Adolph J. Sabath (Democrat), of Illinois, Rules Committee Chairman and himself an advocate of national representation, promised that Summers' plea would be heard at a meeting of the committee Monday or Tuesday.

With seven members of his committee either out of the city for the week or ill, Sabath explained, there was little chance of summoning a quorum of the group before next week.

Sabath Notified

Arrangements for next week's committee meeting were made by Summers yesterday when he called on Sabath to notify him officially, in accordance with legislative procedure, that the Judiciary Committee, of which he is chairman, has favorably reported a bill to amend the Constitution to give the District national representation and to give Congress authority to grant the city self-government.

With Chairman Sabath already committed to national representation, slight chance was foreseen of the committee's refusal to grant the Summers resolution a special rule which would enable leaders to call it before the House as early as next week.

Representative Sam Rayburn, of Texas, House majority leader, yesterday repeated assurances that the resolution would be considered before adjournment. He said the measure would be acted upon as soon as the House clears up major national legislation now pending.

King Pushes His Bill

At the same time Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, pressed toward action on the resolution of the Capitol on a resolution similar to the Summers bill. In a move that made it possible for both Houses to act simultaneously to give votes to Washington, King issued a call for a meeting of his Judiciary subcommittee today to decide whether hearings on the measure are to be held.

King has been inclined to await final action by the House out of deference to Summers, but observers believed there would be no objection to independent Senate action by House leaders.

The Senate bill is identical with Summers' resolution except that it would make it possible for the District to elect Senators as well as Representatives in the House.

Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committee, meanwhile, continued his drive to obtain consideration of legislation to give the District self-government.

Gov. Stark Leads Senator Truman In Missouri Vote

St. Louis, Aug. 6 (AP)—Missouri's Gov. Lloyd C. Stark took the lead tonight in the three-way race for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator.

In 1935 of the State's 4,447 precincts, including five of 783 in St. Louis and 22 of 551 in Jackson County (Kansas City), Stark had 56,139 to 76,999 for Harry S. Truman, the incumbent, and 40,240 for Maurice M. Milligan, who quit as United States district attorney in Kansas City to get into the contest.

The issue of "bossism" was hurled from every conceivable angle. Stark and Milligan found occasion to use it against each other, while joining in attempts to brand Truman as the "Pendergast Senator" because he had been elected in 1934 as the personal choice of T. J. Pendergast, former Kansas City political leader.

Manvel H. Davis, of Kansas City, jumped far into the lead for the Republican Senatorial nomination—a seven-way race that included a former Democrat, Ewing X. Mitchell, of Springfield, who served as Assistant Secretary of Commerce in President Roosevelt's first term.

Lawrence, McDaniel, St. Louis excise commissioner backed by the city administration of Mayor Bernard F. Dickmann, had 34,475 votes to 20,369 for State Senator Allen McReynolds for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Willkie Partisans Coerce Employees, Byrnes Asserts; Flynn Denounced

By William V. Nesaly

Heated political charges were hurled at the Capitol yesterday, as "corporation friends" of Wendell L. Willkie were accused of coercing employees on behalf of the Willkie campaign fund, and old denunciations of Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn were revived.

As the swirling accumulation of bitterness increased, the author of the Hatch "clean politics" law drafted amendments urged by Attorney General Robert H. Jackson to block what were termed "evasions" proposed by Republican General Counsel Henry P. Fletcher.

Byrnes Leads Kresge Letter

The day's developments: Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, read to the Senate a letter to employees of the S. S. Kresge Co., in Detroit, from a company official, soliciting donations to help elect Willkie, Republican Presidential nominee.

Byrnes demanded an investigation.

Attorney General Jackson, in a letter to Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, urged provision of penalties for sale of "campaign books" or advertising in them, in addition to closing loopholes in the Hatch law pointed out Saturday by Fletcher.

Representative Hallett, Willkie's nominator at the Philadelphia convention, challenged Jackson to "carry out the 'clean-up' campaign" started by his predecessor, Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy, against the "Kelly-Kash and Hague messes." Hallett also declared Mayor LaGuardia, of New York, once had termed Democratic Chairman Flynn a "protector of graft, racketeering and exploitation."

Senator Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, declared that Senator Guffey (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, had practiced "dirty, mendacious partisan politics" in charging in the Senate that Willkie was "born and baptized Lewis Wendell Willkie."

The letter to Kresge employees was signed by C. P. Tuttle, whom Byrnes identified as vice president and treasurer of the company.

Tuttle wrote that the appeal was "neither a 'louch' nor a command," but that every man who had had steady employment in the last seven and a half years had seen the national debt mount to $50,000,000,000 and "will want to take definite action in both a financial and active manner to help in the election this fall of Wendell Willkie."

Stark With $1,000

To finance a national campaign of this magnitude requires a very great amount of money and Mr. Willkie will not be in a position to demand a week's salary from everyone on the Government pay roll, or dole—so it's up to folks like you and me to foot the bill," Tuttle wrote.

Noting that he was starting the list off with a donation of $1,000.

Gov. Ratner, Burke Win Nomination In Kansas

Topeka, Kans., Aug. 6 (AP)—Kansas Republicans renominated Gov. Payne H. Ratner, 49-year-old Parsons attorney, by a big margin in today's primary.

Democrats chose W. H. Burke, 61, Little River stockman, to oppose him in November.

Gov. Ratner ran better than 5 to 1 over the combined total vote of his two opponents, C. D. Lank, Wichita pickle manufacturer, and Jay A. Welch, Haddam banker.

Burke's margin over his lone opponent, S. L. Mathews, Kansas City attorney, was as lopsided.

Returns from 889 of the State's 2,735 precincts gave Ratner 63,003. Welch 6,548 and Lank 5,345. Returns from 579 precincts gave Burke 18,554 and Mathews 3,771.

Neither Ratner nor Burke made an active campaign.

The State's seven Congressmen were renominated.

London, Aug. 6.—The British Parliament snapped to attention today. Gravely it put aside such trivial topics as budgets, armies, control of the seven seas and blockade of the whole European continent. With a decorum inbred by centuries of democratic debate, it buckled down to the stern business of discussing Noel Coward and Gracie Fields and how they got away to America with so much advice and so much money.

Coward, playwright and actor, was the subject of a question put by Sir Archibald Southby, Conservative.

NOEL

On what mission, he asked, was Coward engaged by His Majesty's government? Had he instructions directing him to seek an interview with the President of the United States? By whose authority did he make suggestions regarding shipments of food by the United States to Europe?

Harold Nicolson, Parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Information, replied that Coward had gone to the United States a few weeks ago with the knowledge and approval of Prime Minister Churchill. Coward had not asked for an interview, so far as Nicolson knew, but he had been requested to call upon President Roosevelt "with whom he had continued for a long time on terms of friendship."

Farm Benefits To Continue, Willkie Says

Candidate Returns To Colorado Springs After Iowa Session

By the Associated Press

Colorado Springs, Aug. 6.—Wendell L. Willkie gave the Nation's farmers today his pledge that "if elected President, I will not take away any of the benefits gained by agriculture in the past few years."

The Republican Presidential nominee made the statement at Des Moines, shortly before flying back to his vacation retreat here after a conference with Midwest Republican Governors and farm leaders.

"I do not favor changing the present farm program unless a better one gradually is evolved," Willkie asserted.

At the nominee's headquarters here, where Willkie will complete the farm section of his formal acceptance address, it was said he would talk both with former President Hoover and Alf M. Landon before going to Elwood, Ind., for the acceptance ceremony August 17.

It was learned that Willkie plans to see Landon, the 1936 Republican Presidential nominee, here early next week. Landon was expected to discuss with Willkie his views regarding farm, foreign policy and other important issues of the campaign.

The Willkie-Hoover conversation was expected to take place somewhere in Montana—perhaps at a private lodge. There was no definite word, however, as to when or where the two would meet.

The nominee made public messages of endorsement from George Ade, Brock Pemberton and Mrs. Walter D. Lamar, former president general of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Hurricane Season Opens

Hundreds Flee as Gulf Storm Lashes Coast of Louisiana

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Aug. 6.—Storm refugees by the hundreds fled Louisiana's low-lying Gulf Coast today before a tropical disturbance edging westward toward Texas after causing extensive floods and disrupting communications from Mobile, Ala., to western Louisiana.

The death of one man from fright was the only casualty reported, but it was feared there might be additional loss of life in isolated coastal settlements swept by high tides that accompanied the gale and tropical downpour.

The Weather Bureau this afternoon put the center of the storm, the first of the Gulf hurricane season, on or near the Louisiana coast just southeast of Morgan City, apparently moving west-northwestward. Storm warnings were extended to Houston, Tex., with gales expected along the upper Texas coast tonight.

Throughout the day the historic Evangeline country of southwestern Louisiana was lashed by the gale which caused extensive crop damage in that sugar, rice and truck-growing section.

New Orleans, where high winds before dawn uprooted trees and littered streets with signboards, was partially marooned tonight with all planes grounded, railroad service eastward halted by flooded tracks and several highways inundated.

Approximately 1,000 residents of Delacroix Island, below the city, were evacuated.

Coastal shipping was at a standstill. Destruction of many small craft was reported.

British Likely To Reject U. S. Blockade Plea

Expected to Bar Food Shipments to Nazi-Occupied Europe

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 6.—Great Britain, it was indicated tonight, probably will refuse an implicit plea by the United States Ambassador to Belgium that the blockading British navy permit shipment of food from America to avert starvation in Belgium and elsewhere in Europe.

An informed British source said it was "unlikely that Britain will allow any food into German-occupied Europe."

The envoy, John Cudahy, had declared conditions "close to famine" would prevail in Belgium by mid-September unless American shipments get through.

Indirectly, he used the phrase, "a howling hell," to picture the possible situation in Belgium and elsewhere in Europe when winter comes.

Within a few hours after Cudahy's prediction, this British comment discounting it was forthcoming:

"It is not at all certain that Europe will be in such a bad way over food as Mr. Cudahy thinks. Belgium and the other occupied countries will have to make up their shortages from Germany. If the Germans are prepared to share fairly there probably won't be any famine in Europe this winter."

This source added that the official British attitude toward relaxation of the European blockade is not likely to be defined until a test case arises—that is, when a food ship encounters the blockade, which extends from Africa to the Arctic.

Informed French political circles have asserted the French government will support the British position.

French Press Aide To Quit Capital For Chinese Post

Jean Paul Boncour, press chief at the French Embassy, said last night he had been transferred by the Vichy Government to a post in China. He came here only a month ago.

He said he expected to leave for the Orient at the end of the month. He will be counselor of the French Embassy in Shanghai.

Count Rene de Saint-Quentin, the French Ambassador, has already announced that he will return to France. The Vichy government announced his replacement several days ago by Senator G. Henri-Haye, of Versailles.

GILT OFF THE BIG DOME

Thought while watching the Capitol's dome and diplomats a-frolic: "Oh, glamor, glamor, glamor!" Willkie may give New York City almost a complete go-by until November, thinks it's just a good place to visit during a campaign.

Government men now act on the assumption that there are 50,000 spies and fifth columnists here with closer surveillance to our Republic than to W. Willkie. Ablest book on the Labor Board so far is J. Rosenfarb's "The National Labor Policy." But you've doubtless read it already. The labor view, of course.

Mint officials think the extraordinary demand for coins is due partly to the optimistic American pursuit of the elusive jackpot in slot machines. . . . Wages and Hours Division, sworn to reduce working hours, lately worked many employees as high as 55-60 hours a week.

Apparently workers at Agriculture here, down in Humidity Hollow, are most susceptible to heat. They've been sent home often. Memos have warned War Department tollers not to discuss military stuff, and any good-looking brunet who wears a tight-fitting turban a la Mata Hari at a cocktail party is suspected of being a spy.

But the blondes claim they make the best spies; more insidious. . . . Let Military Intelligence or the Bureau of Standards decide that fine point: on that I'm neutral. . . . At Civil Aeronautics each employee is expected to work overtime one night a week; almost a regular schedule.

One of the colored bootblacks who comes to Congressmen's offices to make their shoes glisten in a spiritual haze, in his spare time, . . . Hamt' healed any Congressmen yet, so far as I know. A sober driver who drives 60 m. p. h. at night is 30 per cent likelier to die than student pilots at Army and Navy flying schools.

So many aliens may duck the registration law that we may and up with everyone who isn't an alien obliged to carry on identity card to prove it's all the old country. . . . Overheard at the War Dept.: A defense program might be outlanked like the Maginot Line.

During the last war a high official ruled out the production of corsets on the ground that corsets did not need trimming; not a vital necessity. He didn't know corsets were drawings. . . . He almost won the war in one swoop. When someone says "No" to one of Bill Knudsen's requests he can't seem to understand.

Sixteen distinct committees and subcommittees of Congress must pass every military measure. . . . Senator Lodge is trying to reduce this number to four, but bumps into tradition and precedent. There are now 199 persons on the President's permanent office payroll.

The war saved whales from extinction by Nazi factory ships, they were going after their 1,500-pound livers for Vitamin A. . . . Senator Josh Lee has turned down a $12,000-a-year lifetime judgeship because he thinks he's more useful in his $10,000 post as Senator. . . . A tourist gal insisted in a loud voice that one of the marble generals in Statuary Hall looks like Noah Beery.

There's always a crowd at the Navy Yard to give the President a sendoff or a greeting on his weekend Potomac cruises. . . . Rumor hath it that British intelligence men are keeping closer watch on Scholz at Boston and Wiedemann at San Francisco, the Nazi consuls, than our own police sleuths.

Lindbergh's last speech appeared three times in the Congressional Record, inserted by enthusiastic isolationists like Landrum and Harold Knudsen. . . . Congressman Hennings, of Missouri, has flowered as one of the most humane and courageous members of the House. . . . Subcommittee Votes Profits Tax

Measure Speeded After Knudsen Asks Quick Action

By John B. Oakes

Post Staff Writer

An excess profits levy expected to raise $300,000,000 the first year and providing alternative plans of taxation was unanimously approved yesterday by a Ways and Means subcommittee of the House.

Coupled with a five-year amortization proposal and suspension of profit restrictions for national defense industries, the measure is expected to receive rapid approval of both House and Senate. Joint public hearings on the plan will begin Friday, with Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau as first witness. Taking as its watchword "time is of the essence," the subcommittee gave its approval to the tripartite program sooner than expected, after hearing William S. Knudsen of the National Defense Commission urge speedy action. It was reported that Knudsen pointed out that defense contracts are not being signed as rapidly as desired because of uncertainty over the amortization and tax situation.

The tax plan agreed upon by the subcommittee yesterday will apply to corporations alone, and to only about 70,000 of the Nation's 478,000 corporations. Most of them will escape the heavy levy by virtue of a flat exemption on the first $5,000 excess profits. Nonetheless, the plan is expected eventually to yield "in the neighborhood of $500,000,000 annually."

Two Plans Offered
The taxpayer would have the choice of two plans, one offered by experts of the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and the other by the Treasury.

Under the first alternative, the corporation would pay the excess profit levy on those profits (above the $5,000 exemption) in excess of average profits for the base period 1938-1939 inclusive.

Under the second plan, offered by the Treasury, corporations would not have to pay excess profit taxes on earnings less than 8 per cent of the first $500,000 of invested capital, and 4 per cent of capital beyond that.

Aside from these minimum exemptions of 8 and 4 per cent, the excess profits rates would apply (above the $5,000 exemption) to profits exceeding the average profit for the base period 1938-39, if that average profit was not more than 10 per cent of capital. The new rates would apply to profit above the 10 per cent level, irrespective of past earnings.

Rates, which would be applicable to whichever of the two plans the taxpayer might choose, begin at 25 per cent of the excess profits in the first bracket, jump to 30 per cent in the second, and are 40 per cent after that.

Based on Credit Allowance
The brackets are based on the amount of excess profit credit which is granted to the taxpayer. Excess profits not above 10 per cent of the excess profits credit are in the first bracket, those not above 20 per cent are in the second, and the balance are in the third.

The tax would work out in this way: If the "average income" plan is used a corporation with an average net income of $50,000 for the 1938-39 period and an income of $65,000 for 1940, would have an excess of $15,000, less the $5,000 exemption, or a net taxable excess of $10,000.

Now, the "credit" is the $50,000 average income, so, according to the rates, the first 10 per cent of that credit, of $5,000, would be taxed at 25 per cent or $1,250. The second 10 per cent would be taxed at 30 per cent, or $1,500, totaling $2,750 tax on the $10,000 taxable excess profit.

If, of course, the taxable excess profit had been higher than $10,000, the balance would have been taxed at the third bracket rate, or 40 per cent.

The Gallup Poll:
Roosevelt Leads Willkie by Small Margin Among New Crop of Young Voters

By Dr. George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion
Copyright, 1940. All Rights Reserved.

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 6.—A majority of the Nation's young people who will be old enough to cast their first Presidential vote in November prefer Franklin D. Roosevelt to Wendell Willkie, according to the results of a national poll just completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion. But this year's crop of new voters is far less pro-Roosevelt than the crop which cast its first vote in the Presidential election four years ago.

The political importance of the young new voters is evidenced by the fact that more than 9,000,000 people have come of voting age since the last Presidential election.

"New Blood" Needed
Any major political party, if it is to perpetuate itself, must constantly draw into its ranks some of this "new blood." In 1936 the Democrats got the lion's share of the new vote. Today—at least at this stage of the campaign—the situation is greatly altered.

When the young new voters were asked in the survey: "If the Presidential election were held today, would you vote for Willkie or for Roosevelt?" the results were as follows:

SENTIMENT OF YOUNG PERSONS ELIGIBLE TO CAST THEIR FIRST PRESIDENTIAL VOTE IN 1940

For Roosevelt 54%
For Willkie 46%

A comparison of this vote with the sentiments of the crop which cast its first vote in 1936 shows a striking difference. The new voters in that year were more than two to one for Roosevelt.

SENTIMENT OF YOUNG PERSONS WHO WERE ELIGIBLE TO CAST THEIR FIRST PRESIDENTIAL VOTE IN 1936

For Roosevelt 68%
For Willkie 32%

One especially interesting sidelight is that this same 1936 crop of new voters, who will be taking part in their second Presidential election this November, are far less pro-Roosevelt today than they were four years ago. Only 53 per cent say they are going to vote for Roosevelt this time, as against 68 per cent who favored Roosevelt in 1936.

It must be remembered, of course, that out of the 9,000,000 young people eligible to vote for the first time this year will actually go out and vote on election day.

But even if only half of them were to cast their ballots it would mean some 4,500,000 votes, a sizable number. The problem of the Roosevelt forces is how to maintain their present advantage with the new voters, while the problem of the Republicans is how to lure a greater share of that vote into the Willkie camp. Institute polls over the past few years have consistently found the young people one of Roosevelt's greatest sources of popular strength.

The President still has a strong advantage, the poll finds, with the young people in the lower income groups. If the new crop of young voters is divided into three income categories—upper, middle and lower—the upper and middle are evenly divided between Willkie and Roosevelt, while the lower group is for Roosevelt by about 6 to 4.

PERSONS ELIGIBLE TO VOTE FOR PRESIDENT FOR FIRST TIME THIS YEAR

Upper and middle income groups 50% 50%

Treasury Ruling Aims To Speed Defense

Decision Allows Arms Makers to Deduct Interest Charges on Plant Expansion Loans as a Cost in Figuring Profits

Official dynamite yesterday blew up one and loosened another of the obstacles that have been said by manufacturers to be holding back the national defense program.

While munitions makers were said to be delaying start of work on an estimated volume of $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 in plant expansion work, waiting for favorable tax and profits laws, the following double-quick steps were taken:

The Treasury Department issued a ruling that will allow makers of naval vessels and military aircraft to deduct interest charges on plant expansion loans as a cost in figuring their allowable profits under Vinson-Trammell act profit ceiling rules.

A spokesman for the House tax subcommittee assured arms makers that they will receive preferential tax treatment and urged them not to wait until the concessions are written into actual law, which may take a few weeks.

The Treasury ruling, which followed by 24 hours a conference of defense and tax leaders, apparently summoned at the suggestion of President Roosevelt, may also put to work upwards of $100,000,000 in RFC defense loans, reported to be awaiting just such a ruling.

The ruling under the Vinson-Trammell Act is expected to facilitate the furnishing of capital and credit to industries desiring to participate in the defense program, the Treasury said.

It was described as "covering circumstances not contemplated when the original regulations were issued," a statement interpreted as a reference to the fact that many manufacturers have insisted they could not begin work on defense orders unless interest payments were allowed as a cost of doing business.

The official ruling allowed manufacturers to treat as a cost interest "on money borrowed for the acquisition of special facilities in connection with contracts under the national defense program." The limit of such interest rates was set at 4 per cent.

The ruling applies to manufacturers of Army and Navy aircraft and naval vessels now subject to the Vinson-Trammell Act's profit limit of 7 per cent on negotiated contracts and 8 per cent on competitive bidding contracts. The limits, until recently amended, were 10 per cent and 12 per cent.

Aids Small Contractors
Treasury officials expected the ruling principally to benefit contractors of modest means who have no large reserves of capital on which they can draw for plant expansion work.

The Congressional promise to businessmen of favorable tax treatment was made by Chairman Cooper (Democrat), of Tennessee, of the House Tax subcommittee, while William S. Knudsen, defense commission member, set at his elbow.

Cooper, speaking to newsmen, said the chairman of the Senate and House committees which draft tax laws were certain they could deliver a bill containing provision for manufacturers to deduct the entire cost of new defense plants from their income for tax purposes.

To Contain Repealer
Cooper said the new excess profits bill will contain, besides an amortization provision, a repealer of the Vinson-Trammell profit limits.

It was decided Monday at the Treasury conference that the amortization features and scrapping of the profit ceilings would have to go hand in hand with the tax on excess profits, a decision in line with published statements of Cooper and President Roosevelt.

Cooper said his assurances had the backing of Chairman Daughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, and Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, of the House and Senate tax committees. His statement was approved by Representative Treadway (Democrat), of Massachusetts, ranking Republican on the Ways and Means Committee.

To speed up consideration of the tax measure, Cooper said hearings would begin Thursday, and the House and Senate committees would hear witnesses jointly.

Nazis Claim Great Success on Sea

4,986,860 Tons
Of British Shipping
Sunk, Berlin Says

Copyright by New York Times.
Berlin, Aug. 6.—The impressive total of nearly 5,000,000 tons of enemy shipping sunk by German naval and air forces since the beginning of the war, was announced today by the high command of Germany. The German air force was credited with having inflicted serious damage to another 1,900,000 tons of merchant shipping.

This for the present is the Reich's only answer to the question uppermost in the minds of all nations, including Germany: When is the offensive against Britain going to start? Official quarters stated only that "Germany will strike at the right hour at the right place and not before."

It was recalled by authoritative German quarters that Germany hitherto has waged a "war of surprises."

"There is no reason to believe now, German quarters state, that these methods will not be adhered to in the decisive phase of the war against Britain. This period of quiet which has persisted since the armistice with France, it is stated, is being used to consolidate the Reich's position opposite Germany's final enemy, Exceeds World War Rate

Berlin, Aug. 6.—The German counterblockade, designed to turn fatally upon Britain her greatest historic weapon, was claimed today to be smashing British shipping at a far higher rate than in the unrestricted submarine campaign of the first World War.

The Nazi high command's assertion that 4,986,860 tons of British merchant vessels, and those usable in 11 months of warfare—means a monthly score of about 433,350 tons against an average British loss of 205,000 tons in the 21 months of unrestricted submarine activity in 1917-18. The largest toll taken by German submarines—airplanes not a factor—during any month in the World War was 840,000 tons—118 ships—of British and Allied shipping in April, 1917.

The high command declared that its successes against the British had been "proved by repeated sinking of enemy ports and other evidence."

British Sciff at Figures
By the Associated Press.
London, Aug. 6.—Britain faced approaching winter food problems optimistically today although she put teeth in enforcement of her food-conservation regulations.

Robert Boothby, parliamentary undersecretary of the food ministry, said it hoped to avoid winter extension of rationing, and even to increase Britain's tea allowance.

An order effective August 12, however, will make it punishable by imprisonment up to two years and fines up to £500 ($2,000), to waste food which Britain now defines as everything, except water, "used by man for food or drink."

Eighteen British ships totaling 65,000 tons and two Allied ships totaling 7,000 tons were lost in the week ending July 29, the admiralty announced.

Authoritative sources scoffed, however, at the German high command's communique today which put total losses of shipping useful to Britain at 657,674 tons in the last three weeks of July, exclusive of warships and tonnage sunk by mines.

One informant declared that the communique "once again multiplies the truth nearly fourfold."

"British, allied and neutral merchant shipping sunk during the three weeks from July 7 to July 27 totals 196,112 tons, of which British shipping accounts for 136,141 tons," he said.

The admiralty tonight announced the loss of two naval trawlers, sunk by German mines.

'German Hour' Broadcast Banned By Station WHIP
Chicago, Aug. 6.—Directors of radio station WHIP announced today they had decided to ban daily "German Hour" broadcasts because they deemed the program "controversial" in nature and "unacceptable to many leading Americans."

The owner of the Hammond, Ind., station, the Hammond-Calumet Broadcasting Corporation, notified the sponsor, the German-American National Alliance, that it could not use the station's facilities after next Saturday.

Paul A. F. Wernholz, chairman of the alliance's committee on public relations, contended:

"We are certain that the public will agree that the throttling of the channels of free speech is not in accord with the American way of life. We know that tremendous pressure has been brought to bear by certain interests whose main objective is to get us into the war."

London Pictured as 'Big Target' For Next Nazi Mass Bombing

Attack Will Not Be in Form
Anticipated, Radio Speaker Warns;
Says German Air Force Is Overhauled

By the Associated Press.
London, Aug. 6.—Sprawling London, "with its great docks," was pictured in a German radio broadcast from Bremen tonight as the possible "big target" for the next mass bombing in the Luftkrieg—Germany's air war prelude to blitzkrieg.

The announcer, who said "I cannot tell you when the attack will come or how, but can say that it will not come in the form in which it is anticipated in England," declared that the Nazi air force is overhauled, rested and ready.

"Attacks will be directed against docks and industrial centers," he said, pointing out that densely populated London is the "big target."

ment has asked the United States to exercise pressure on the British to ease the blockade against unoccupied France.

Cudahy cited the probability that German troops of occupation would live off the food of conquered lands if their communications were cut, using supplies which in themselves would be insufficient to support the native populations.

At the same time, Cudahy left some of his interviewers with the impression that he would propose that Washington prepare to deal economically and politically with Germany as the dominant power on the continent.

This point was left vague, Cudahy said he would present the food situation when he returns to the United States next week and "further present the reality of dealing with force as the only power." He would not amplify the remark.

"Their (the Belgians) situation is very, very serious," Cudahy said. "Belgium imports 75 per cent of her wheat. Present supplies, with severe rationing—25 grams, or half a pound, of bread per person per day—will last until September 1, or at best until early October."

"All industry has stopped. Thousands upon thousands of people left the country and there are still more than 2,500,000 Belgians somewhere in France. Harvests are rotting in the sun."

Cudahy compared World War feeding of Belgium with the present situation. Then the Allies still held the Channel ports. Now the Channel ports are in German hands—and American supplies would have to enter German-held ports or be taken over long, overland routes through Portugal and Spain.

Supports Leopold
Cudahy said the surrender of the Belgian army by King Leopold was the only alternative to death for his half-million soldiers and countless refugees who mingled with them.

"When the truth is known about King Leopold," the envoy said, "his decision to surrender will not only be accepted, but will be applauded. The ambassador said in all his travels throughout Belgium, until the Diplomatic Corps was dismissed by the Germans July 15, he knew of not one authentic atrocity committed by the German army in Belgium."

The Germans behaved themselves with great restraint, Cudahy said, adding that "I think these German behaved better than United States soldiers would have done."

Russia Absorbs Last of Three Baltic States

Estonia's Petition To Enter Soviet Union Is Accepted

By the Associated Press.
Moscow, Aug. 6.—Russia took Estonia into the Soviet Union tonight, completing absorption of the three tiny Baltic states.

Sitting in the great white-walled council chamber of the Kremlin, the Supreme Soviet accepted an Estonian petition to enter the U. S. S. R. as the 16th Republic. Latvia and Lithuania already had been accepted.

This action swelled Russia's population to 193,000,000, of whom 10,000,000 came from Rumania, Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia.

Changes Anti-Soviet Drive
Earlier in the day, Tass, the official Soviet news agency, had denounced as the act of a "murderer" the reported assassination in Helsinki, Finland, of a member of the "Society for Friendship and Peace with the U. S. S. R."

"The murderer," the agency commented, "was detained by workers." It added that the Finnish press was persisting in a campaign against the pro-Soviet society.

It was recalled that Premier Molotov had publicly stated on August 1 that Russian-Finnish relations might "be damaged by the campaign against Finnish circles who try to strengthen good-neighborly relations with the U. S. S. R."

Resistance to Agitators
(The assassination reported in Helsinki appeared to foreshadow possible new trouble for Finland, particularly in view of the strong current resistance in Finland to agitation for similar Russian domination there.)

(The Scandinavian wireless reported from Helsinki today that a committee had been appointed by the Finnish State Council to cultivate Finnish-Soviet relations. It also reported that the Finnish inner cabinet had met to discuss measures against demonstrations planned by Communists in Finland tonight, and that both the government and the press were trying to allay public anxiety over recent demonstrations by leftist and radical elements.)

Johnson Urges U. S. to Labor For Defense

San Francisco, Aug. 6.—Louis Johnson, former Assistant Secretary of War, urged America to "work, work, and work more" for national defense and hemispheric unity in a speech today before the National Association of Broadcasters in convention here.

In his first public appearance since quitting the War Department, Johnson said, "We must build up our armaments, tighten up our belts, give unstintingly... to get this job done."

"An unprepared America may mean the end of civilization," he declared. "We have a sacred trust. We dare not fail."

Johnson expounded the need for laying aside individual differences of opinion and personal ambitions, fostering a respect for the "dignity of labor," especially in mechanical skills, for discipline and tolerance, and ideals of our American forefathers—justice, freedom, democracy and loyalty.

Japan Arrests Salvation Army Chiefs as Spies

Seized 6 Days Ago, Still in Custody, Tokyo Announces

By International News Service.
Tokyo, Aug. 6.—Seven Salvation Army leaders, all reported to be Japanese, remained in custody tonight, six days after their arrest on suspicion of espionage.

The arrests were not announced until today.

One, said the War Office, was the Japanese commander in chief of the Salvation Army, which was fostered by the British in its entry to Japan years ago. World headquarters are in London.

While the Britishers who used to head the organization in this country have been supplanted by Japanese, British still act as advisers in some cases.

Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka conferred today with Sir Robert Craigie, British Ambassador, and was reported to have asked an explanation of the arrests of Japanese in London and other parts of the empire. He was understood to have made no demands.

Two prominent Japanese businessmen were arrested last Friday night in London under circumstances almost identical with the previous arrest in Japan of a number of Britishers.

(The Japanese Ambassador to London made a sharp protest, but the British denied they had acted in retaliation.)

(Today in London the resultant British-Japanese tension was reported to have eased after the release of one of the Japanese, Satoru Mokihara, agent for vast business and banking interests.)

(A Japanese spokesman said privately: "We believe there is now every indication that relationships between Japan and Britain will continue to improve.")

Guardsmen Test Turnpike For 'Blitzkrieg' Movement

The more than 900 men of the 26th here, many of whom were pounding typewriters in Washington, D. C., finally found a trip which would have taxed their skill and morale of most Regular regiments. They had covered nearly 500 miles of heavily traveled and mountainous road without a single accident. They were on the road every day, 12 to 14 hours more every day; nobody got more than four or five hours' sleep any night, and that in shelter tents or truck beds.

In a chilly, drizzle this morning they had to start digging for their blankets and began the task of digging itself and its trucks from the mud. With hardly an exception, all motor transport was bogged down in the mud. But the 26th went down to the running boards, a 3-inch

LEARNED A LESSON FROM HITLER—Pennsylvania National Guardsmen, testing the wartime value of the State's new $70,000,000 high-speed turnpike, make a final check of maps before starting the "blitzkrieg" maneuver. gun and a six-wheeled prime mover were stuck, thwarting the main entrance to the camp. Trucks had to be pushed to start down hill.

Since most of the four-section convoys had connections yesterday with tank trucks ordered ahead, most of the vehicles had to be gassed this morning, a time-consuming operation with gasoline carried in 55-gallon cans from tank to the trucks.

One by one, the trucks charged at the soupy ditch separating the field from the narrow road along the edge of the swamp. They splashed through with a great clatter of mud. Waiting crews swung onto equipment; others careened widely and settled to their axles in the mud. Waiting crews swung to the aid of the mightily bogged, grained out onto the road.

Broadcasters Indorse Stand On ASCAP Issue

San Francisco, Aug. 6 (AP).—The National Association of Broadcasters today endorsed the policy of its board to resist control of popular music by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The convention supported the position of President Neville Miller that member radio stations discontinue use of music controlled by A. S. C. A. P. if that society imposes a sharp increase in fees charged the broadcasters for use of music.

In New York, A. S. C. A. P. asserted the N. A. B. threat was a "conspiracy on the part of the networks to deprive the public of a full opportunity to hear all of the music of the entire world."

Accused of Bribe

New Orleans, Aug. 9 (AP)—Louisiana's "hot oil" charges against former Gov. Richard W. Leche and others that figured prominently in the 1939 Federal investigations in Louisiana were revived today with charges of bribery against Leche and Seymour Weiss, prominent hotel man here and in New York.

District Attorney J. Bernard Connelly, of Orleans Parish, filed direct bills of information charging the two men directly and indirectly received a bribe in connection with the 1938 alleged "hot oil" case in which the Federal Government had charged they conspired to evade the Connally Act.

The War Department yesterday designated squadron numerals for the recently authorized aviation unit of the District National Guard which will be known as the 121st Observation Squadron.

More than 50 inquiries a day are being received at the unit's recruiting office, 743 Fourteenth street northwest, Lieut. James Higgs, recruiting officer, said.

One of eight National Guard aviation units in the United States authorized by the Secretary of War, the squadron when complete will have 105 enlisted men and 30 officers.

Enlistment is for three years, and preference is given to applicants with previous military or aviation experience. In addition to instruction in flying, training also is given in aerial photography, wire and radio communication, aircraft and Where Is Western Hemisphere?

The Western Hemisphere, if you want to get technical about United States defense problems, includes all of New Zealand and a tip of Siberia in the East, and Greenland and a portion of Iceland in the West.

The question of where is the Western Hemisphere was brought up in the Senate yesterday in a colloquy between Senators Ashurst and Gillette during debate on the bill to authorize President Roosevelt to muster the National Guard into the Federal service.

The gentlemen agreed that nei-

Hemisphere ends, but not until it embraces New Zealand and a lot of other places where Mr. Roosevelt has no intention of sending the National Guard.

How you bound the hemisphere, the authority reported, depends upon whether you are a "political geographer" or a "technical cartographer." To the former, the Western Hemisphere is simply the New World—North and South America. The latter, however, begins his computation of the area, approximately at the twentieth parallel, just west of Cape Verde, because, palpably, no part of Africa can be included.

without talking to reporters.

The question of replacing the National Guard for home defense activities was brought up when Gov. John Lehman of New York had supper with Mr. Roosevelt last night.

The matter is still in the study stage and the War Department has not yet made recommendations.

President said, then added that probably veterans and such organi-

In another step, Hull told the House Banking Committee that a "strong and effective" Export-Import Bank was "essential" to United States cooperation in the "economic defense" of the Western Hemisphere. But the bank's loans could be made to develop orderly Pan-American marketing and to stabilize and enlarge hemisphere-wide commerce.

At Havana, Hull wired the committee, "the American nations organizations as the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, to form the nucleus of the home guard. The plan is contingent on Congressional passage of legislation to allow the Government to call out the guard and to give the citizen-soldiers intensified training.

Veterans then would face the prospect of being asked to serve in the defense of the hemisphere, proclaimed martial law. They might go on duty in strikes, riots cial, as they were for years, but more personal and social.

special qualifications Coward possessed to act as a "kind of an ambassador to the United States."

To this Nicolson replied Coward had acted with the powers of an ambassador. He had other qualifications. These qualifications Nicolson described as "possessing contacts with certain sections of American opinion which are very difficult to reach through ordinary means."

Edgar Grenville, a liberal, stood up and said Coward was a gentleman who did not appeal to the democracy of America. He didn't even represent the democracy of England. Therefore, wouldn't Nicolson recall him? Before Nicolson had time to reply, another member of Parliament, Capt. F. J. Bellenger, inquired whether the prime minister was aware that feeling was rising in this country at the idea that "if a man has a certain amount of publicity value and money he can get out of this country and not return to the country when the country is going through a period of great stress and anxiety."

"That is not quite fair," said Nicolson. Quite a few members agreed, implying something which sounded like "hear hear."

Alfred Denham, Conservative, went further. He popped up and said: "It is not Mr. Coward only doing what any other Britisher would do in another country—speaking well of his own."

That ended that.

The busy Commons then passed on from Coward to the subject of Miss Fields, a Lancashire lass who sings and recites, and her recently acquired husband, Monty Banks, of Hollywood, whose real name is Mario Bianchi. In spite of all the exchange restrictions, they had left England a few weeks ago with permission to take several thousand pounds to America. Parliament wanted to know how that came about, since most people leaving this island can take only £10 away. Some members were also interested in hearing about the departure across the Atlantic of a Mr. Davis, who plays the piano accompaniment while Miss Fields sings.

Gracie, as everybody calls her, is the highest paid entertainer in Britain. Before the war turned her mind to other things than income, it was the host of British publicists that Miss Fields made more money in pounds sterling singing her songs on this island than any of the glamorous females of Hollywood or Broadway could fetch in dollars in the course of a busy year.

An inquisitive Labor member, J. J. Davidson, tried today into the matter of how much money Gracie and Monty and Mr. Davis were allowed to take when they went to America.

The increasing number of divorces in this country is something to be concerned about, but just think how much worse conditions would be if it were as easy to get divorced as it is to get married.

It is a sad commentary on American patriotism when its youth must be conscripted to protect itself and its own firesides. But compulsory military service, in view of past experience and present attitude, is certainly the only solution.

An article of this nature is an effective means of combating the pullifying Nazi influence and propaganda in this country. It gets the facts squarely before the people. The newspapers of America could render their country yeoman service by forcefully bringing to the attention of the public such information. GORDON FINLEY,

I feel it is a sad state of affairs indeed, when one is compelled to make accusations against those who are put in positions of trust and in whom it is necessary to have faith in times of chaos, but, the record speaks for itself!

We did a thriving business in credit until we were closed up by our creditors. I wonder if our creditors got as much fun out of it as we did.

A Fair Gamble

The Destroyer Question

FOR MORE than two months our most important national policies have been shaped by fear that Great Britain will fall before the Nazi-Fascist alliance.

This fear led to the decision to increase our Navy by 50 per cent—thus providing for the two-ocean navy for which we did not feel the need as long as the eastern Atlantic was securely held by the British navy. It led to the decision to hasten the building of a great air force and to train and equip with modern weapons an army of 1,200,000 men—the number which our Army experts consider necessary to defend the Western Hemisphere.

It also led to the summoning of the Inter-American Conference of Foreign Ministers at Havana and the adoption there of the Declaration and Act of Havana, which gave substance to earlier efforts to convert the Monroe Doctrine into a Pan-American policy, supported voluntarily by all the Latin-American republics.

All these policies were dictated by prudence and the only question is whether they were not adopted too late. Although our naval strength will increase steadily, we cannot get our full two-ocean navy before 1945 or 1946. Before then, if we have not already met disaster, our idea of adequate naval protection may have to be revised sharply upward. For we may be engaged in a building race with the combined shipyards of Asia, Europe and the British Isles. Our minimum army cannot be equipped and trained until near the end of 1941 and our air forces cannot reach the present goal of 35,000 planes until the middle of 1942.

IF GREAT BRITAIN holds out, at least part of our newly authorized military and naval preparations probably will prove unnecessary. And we may be spared the dreadful uncertainties and potential calamities of the period between the fall of Britain and the building of our armed strength to the level necessary for our defense.

The consensus of informed military experts in Washington is that the fate of Britain will be determined within the next few weeks. If the British hold out until mid-October or November the odds on their ultimate victory will jump. By the first of the year planes and munitions manufactured in the United States will be available in larger quantities, together with increased aid from the dominions.

As to whether the British can survive until autumn there are differences of opinion. One expert whose forecasts are based on the quick Nazi triumph in Poland, the Low Countries and France puts the British chances at a little less than even. Another who was substantially correct as to the course of the war on the continent calls them roughly 50-50.

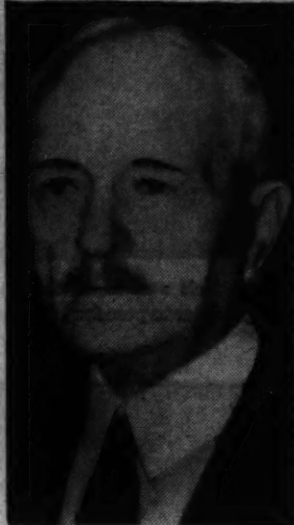

BRITISH MORALE is excellent, and the last six weeks have been put to full use in strengthening their defense against invasion. However, the Nazi counterblockade of Great Britain has been tightening, and the Nazis, as this is written, have not thrown their air force into real action. They have sent, at most, some 200 to 250 planes on their climatic victory over the British Channel. They have thousands.

While a full-fledged attempt at invasion would cost the Nazis heavy casualties, the prevailing view of experts is that it will be attempted, probably on the heels of devastating air attacks and perhaps simultaneously with landings in Ireland and the Azores and at lacks by the Italians on Gibraltar and Egypt.

Among the urgent needs of the British is one which we are in a position to supply immediately, at least in part. That is for destroyers.

During the winter and spring months many Americans, including this columnist, said that if sea power could win the war Great Britain would be victorious without naval aid from us. Since then the French fleet has dropped out and the Italian fleet, numerous in the destroyer category, has come in. The British fleet has shouldered the heavy task of guarding the exits of the Mediterranean, blockading the entire continent of Europe, conveying ships into Britain against the intensifying counterblockade and defending the British Isles against invasion.

For all of these operations destroyers are necessary, and for some they are indispensable. But 30 of their destroyers have been sunk, and more than that number are temporarily out of action on account of damage. For all purposes, they probably have in operation at the present time not more than 100 destroyers, and perhaps as few as 75.

WE HAPPEN to have 236 destroyers, more than 100 of them old World War destroyers which recently have been recommissioned. The proposal, approved by Gen. Pershing in his Sunday night message to the Nation, is that we sell 50 of these to Great Britain or Canada.

The number 50 has been arrived at by balancing the British need against our need if Britain goes down.

There is risk involved. The British may quickly go down to defeat, anyway. They might sue for peace and surrender their fleet. The suggestion that the sale be made to Canada rather than to Great Britain was with the thought that, if Britain should surrender, the surviving destroyers would be more likely to return to this side of the Atlantic.

International law is supposed to forbid the sale of an armed vessel by a neutral to a belligerent. But that would be a flimsy technical reason for failing to act if our vital national interest in keeping the war on the other side of the Atlantic could be served. To the layman there is no difference between selling the British bombing planes and selling them destroyers.

The British have trained crews which they say can man our destroyers and take them into service within ten days.

Nobody can guarantee that 50 destroyers will tilt the precarious balance of the war in favor of Great Britain. But in the destroyer category there is a hole in British naval power which we are in a position to narrow.

This is a question which should be decided solely with a view to our own national defense. The more it is examined with that purpose alone in mind the greater seems the advantage of risking 40 or 50 destroyers on a fair gamble that the war can be kept on the other side of the Atlantic.

Fair Enough

She Doesn't Belong

MRS. ROOSEVELT wrote in her column last Saturday that she had just read a criticism of the American Newspaper Guild, which is run by the Communists, and that, although she agreed with much of it, she would not resign because she had made no effort to contribute anything as a member.

"I am going to try to do so in the future," Mrs. Roosevelt wrote. "Because I believe that until you have done your very best to make an organization useful you have no right to leave it."

If Mrs. Roosevelt knew as much as she should about this Trojan horse to which she has decided to continue to pitch her she would be aware that the question whether she will leave it is not for her to decide. The guild constitution contains a trick, or man-trap, clause, stealthily concealed beneath the hypocritical professions of high purpose and the standard constitutional provisions, which forbids resignation and provides expulsion for those who attempt to do so. I will go into that another time, but for today this point will mean that, of course, this trap couldn't hold her because she is a privileged character who has no right to belong to a guild of newspaper workers, anyway.

MRS. ROOSEVELT is no more eligible for membership in the Newspaper Guild in any honest interpretation of the terms of eligibility than I am for membership in the B. A. A., a thoroughly American group from which she resigned with resounding political eclat, apparently having decided that she had done her very best to make it useful.

Mrs. Roosevelt was taken into the guild in an honorary status for the ballyhoo value of her adherence. The section of eligibility says that membership shall be for persons who are gainfully employed and devote the major part of their time to their employment in the business. That Mrs. Roosevelt's employment as a columnist is gainful I will readily grant, but nobody will believe, and I doubt anyone would be dishonest enough to assert, that she devotes the major part of her time to journalism, or to put it more fairly, that journalism is her occupation.

This union was intended for newspaper people, and although the Communists have used its doors to Communists of miscellaneous occupations for the purpose of overwhelming by force of numbers the journalists trapped in the guild, Mrs. Roosevelt still remains ineligible because her implication in journalism is strictly an egg-money activity. The same material written by Mrs. George Spelvin never would have been printed, much less paid for, and it is significant that her salary lay dormant until the election of 1932.

IT COMES DOWN to this, therefore: That the prestige of the Presidency of the United States is here being used to give aid and comfort to a group of Communist conspirators to the detriment and distress of a great many decent, loyal Americans employed as journalists. Only because she is the wife of the President is Mrs. Roosevelt gainfully employed as a journalist, and only because she is the President's wife is she a member of the Newspaper Guild.

Moreover, when she did join, a special reservation was made for her whereby, contrary to the constitution and in contrast to the terms imposed on legitimate members, she would not be required to go on strike if one should be called to compel the reinstatement of an incorrigible, incompetent and lazy office boy or for any other reason. The regular newspaper men and women, however, would be required to strike and lose their jobs or suffer the most hateful persecution—physical and mental—at the hands of the Communist politicians in control.

Mrs. Roosevelt just doesn't belong, and the step toward making the guild useful would be to get rid of the ineligible, starting with her.

Haynes Named Armstrong High School Principal

Harold A. Haynes today will become principal of Armstrong High School, succeeding the late G. D. Houston.

Haynes was promoted from the principalship of Browne Junior High School which he held since 1932. He was appointed yesterday by the Board of Education.

Haynes graduated from the University of Pittsburgh in electrical engineering in 1910 and received the master of arts degree from the University of Chicago in 1930. He is now a candidate for the doctor's degree in education at New York University, expecting to complete his work this summer.

During the World War he was employed as an electrical expert in the United States Navy Yard in New York for seven months. He taught at the Howard University school of engineering for six years. Later he taught at Armstrong High School 13 years. He served as assistant superintendent in charge of research and chief examiner, divisions 10-13 of the public school system, on a temporary status in 1931-32.

His countrymen were startled by his sudden misgivings about the virtue of political parties and the desirability of individual freedom in a "democracy." See the article by Vicente Albano Pacia below

By Vicente Albano Pacia

Sudden Doubts About Democracy

Manila. WHEN THE FIRST missionaries of American democracy, Jacob Gould Shryman and, after him, William Howard Taft, reached Manila some 40 years ago, fighting between the American forces and the insurgents of Gen. Aguinaldo was still going on with ferocity. Manuel L. Quezon, who was a major of infantry, was in the thick of the battles. When democracy took French leave in Paris this month Quezon was in Malacanang Palace as President of the Philippine Commonwealth.

The Philippine Commonwealth, according to both its American and Filipino boosters, is the world's newest democracy. But, somehow, when Marshal Petain surrendered France to Hitler and administered the coup de grace to the French Republic, Quezon's still shiny veneer of democratic education began to crack and peel off. Whether his old soldier's spirit had suddenly warmed to the dash and dash of Hitler's blitzkrieg, it was hard to tell. The plain fact was that he had taken time to compare the staying powers of Nazism and European democracy and had accepted the tragic fate of France as conclusive proof that there was something radically and fundamentally wrong with the democratic way.

THIS PROFOUND ideological revolution in the head of the little President revealed itself the other day when he appeared before students of the state university and declared that the beliefs that political parties are indispensable to democracy and that individual liberty should not be curtailed are mere "fetters" that should be forgotten. The following day, sympathetic newspapers, government officials and employees and officers of the army were vying with each other in the novelty of their endorsement of the Presidential denial. While some contented themselves with denouncing a "streamlined democracy," others, the Spanish-speaking ones, were calling Jefferson and Montesquieu's ideal "democracy" a "memo in Spanish meaning 'stupid'."

The first democratic institution Quezon marked for oblivion was the political party. Talking not very differently from Washington in his farewell address, he denounced the ill of present-day democracy as due to the "pernicious effects of baneful partisan spirit." Continuing, he said, "It was this same spirit which, after the World War, brought about chaos in Italy and opened the way to Fascism; it was this same spirit which, according to Marshal Petain, made it impossible for France to prepare for this war as well as Germany. It is party politics that causes inefficiency in government; it is party spirit that weakens the government and makes it incapable of facing difficult situations."

The second democratic institution he would send to the guillotine is individual freedom. "The second slogan that must be thrown overboard," he said, "is the theory that in a democracy individual liberty must not be restricted... civilization has made progress only at the expense of individual liberty."

IN THE BACK of Quezon's head was his request submitted the previous day to the National Assembly for almost totalitarian powers. Declaring that the Philippines faced an emergency due to the European and Chinese wars and the practical wiping out of the Philippines' foreign trade outside of that with the United States, he demanded: "I must have authority to control the food resources of the country and, to this end, to require all citizens to render personal civil service; to prevent, whenever the public interest so requires, strikes and unwholesome social activities; to commandeer ships and other means of transportation in order to facilitate the free and continued movement of goods and merchandise." He would like, in short, to wield vast powers without being checked and harassed by political parties, the press, and individual critics.

Too good a constitutional lawyer not to know that individual liberty cannot be restricted or abolished without Congress' independent action being violated, United States High Commissioner Francis B. Sayre limited his comment to the Quezon proposal to abolish political parties. "I believe the life of a democracy," said Dr. Sayre, "is stimulated by a vigorous expression of the views of the minority. Democracy is based on the determination of issues, and the way to determine issues, to get those over to the people, is through two parties."

Immediately upon reading the Sayre statement, Quezon said: "I am not surprised that High Commissioner Sayre disagrees with me on the need of a party system. That is the orthodox view. We Filipinos have to do our own thinking and learn from the lesson of contemporary history or bust." By the time this statement was printed in the Manila press, Sayre was already in Baguio, the summer capital, cooling off.

CLARO M. RECTO, president of the Constitutional Convention, took up the request for powers by insisting that if they are granted, it be under specific restrictions. He added: "It is merely academic to talk of restrictions since our National Assembly has such implicit faith in the President that he has only to express his wish in that body in order that it may be granted."

What is even more startling is that Quezon insists he is a democrat. "I am," he announced, "the opponent of dictatorship in whatever form, including the dictatorship of the proletariat." But then, not so very long ago, he had also said, "The Philippines cannot resist invasion in the next 30 years. But we should have independence in 1944. We may be conquered again but we shall again win our freedom in another 300 years."

Text of Hull's Statement

'Tragic Lesson'

Following is the text of the statement by Secretary of State Hull:

The strong belief of the representatives of the 21 American nations at the recent Havana meeting was that the military and other sinister activities on the part of some nations in other large areas of the world present real possibilities of danger to the American republics.

It was universally recognized that a threat to any important part of the Americas means a threat to each and all of the American nations. It was, therefore, agreed that full and adequate preparations for continental defense could not be taken too soon if the threatened danger from abroad was to be checked and terminated. It was also the unanimous view at Havana that the prompt strengthening of unity and solidarity for the purpose of continental defense and for its implementation by concrete programs supported by the 21 nations was indispensable to the safety, security, peace and welfare of this hemisphere.

THERE was general agreement that if the peaceful nations of Europe had thus promptly organized themselves for self-defense on the most effective cooperative basis, the chances are that their situation and that of Europe would be vastly different today. Instead, many of these countries completely relied upon utterances of peaceful purpose and upon their own neutrality to safeguard them against the mighty forces of invasion, conquest, and destruction. Some of them have been overrun and destroyed by the ruthless invader. Their fate should be a tragic lesson to us.

The vast forces of lawlessness, conquest and destruction are still moving across the earth like a savage and dangerous animal at large. By their very nature, those forces will not stop unless and until they recognize that there exists unbreakable resistance.

AT HAVANA we forged new instruments of continental defense. These will be of vast importance to our Nation and to every American nation. But there are other and immense tasks still before us. I would greatly prefer to say that we are safe in this country and in this hemisphere from outside danger. But I am firmly convinced that what is taking place today in many areas of the earth is a relentless attempt to transform the civilized world as we have known it into a world in which lawlessness, violence and force will reign supreme, as they did a thousand years ago. The people of this country cannot recognize too soon this fact and its overwhelming significance for our national safety and the dangers have to our national institutions.

THE ONE and only sure way for our Nation to avoid being drawn into serious trouble or actual war by the wild and destructive forces now abroad elsewhere in the world and to command respect for its rights and interests abroad is for our people to become thoroughly conscious of the possible threat of danger, to make up their minds that we must continue to arm and to arm to such an extent that the forces of conquest and domination will not dare make an attack on us or on any part of this hemisphere. To this end, each citizen must be ready and willing for real sacrifices of time and of substance and for hard personal service. In the face of terrible problems and conditions, and until the present serious threats and dangers have disappeared we cannot pursue complacently the course of our customary normal life.

I feel constrained thus to offer my views in the light of what is already a dangerously widespread movement for world conquest and for the destruction of most of the worth-while things which civilization has given the human race.

A Matter Of History

By Barnet Nover

Examining A Generalization

"IN THE PAST," said Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in his address of last Sunday, "we have dealt with a Europe dominated by England and France. In the future we may have to deal with a Europe dominated by Germany."

This seems, at first glance, to be a simple statement of fact, a generalization which, whether one likes it or not, permits of no denial. Yet it does not bear up well under critical examination. Col. Lindbergh did not define just what he meant by "Europe" nor what he meant by "dominated."

relatively complacent about Europe's prospective change of masters.

"Whether England or Germany wins this war," he said, "Western civilization will still depend upon two great centers, one in each hemisphere."

"An agreement between us could maintain civilization and peace throughout the world as far into the future as we can see."

NOW the Europe with which the United States has had to deal since we became a Nation has never been an entity but only a collection of entities. Napoleon did it by bullet and bayonet and propaganda to make it one under French control. But even at the height of his power there were areas on the continent not subject to his rule or dictation. And there was England to challenge his ambitions and ultimately to create a coalition that was to overthrow him.

The United States has never dealt with Europe, only with Great Britain, France, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Holland, Belgium and the other nations of that continent. For during that century and a half boundaries were in a state of almost constant flux; some nations disappeared, others rose. Yet, after the fall of Napoleon, by one nation was dominant throughout that geographic area we call Europe.

TO BE SURE, there were great powers and small powers. Among the great powers one usually tended to overshadow the others. Yet no one nation, not the France of Napoleon III or Raymond Poincaré, not the Germany of Bismarck or William II, not the England of Castlereagh or Queen Victoria or Lloyd George was in any sense the unquestioned master of Europe.

Thus when Col. Lindbergh talks of a "Europe dominated by England and France" in the same breath with a "Europe dominated by Germany," he is putting utterly dissimilar circumstances side by side as though they were the same. In pre-Hitler Europe England and France may, in Col. Lindbergh's understanding, have been the dominant powers, although that is subject to very considerable qualifications. But the other nations of the Continent were not inhibited thereby from exercising their full measure of independence. Neither Great Britain nor France tried to dictate their economies, force their governmental systems into a special political mold, compel them to think as London and Paris desired.

THIS is precisely what is happening in the Europe which Hitler dominates and will to an increasing degree be the case if Nazi victory is his. Europe bids fair to become a continent in which only one nation—Germany—is independent, the other sovereign areas have been reduced to the status of slave and serf.

Despite Col. Lindbergh's assurances, it will not be so easy for the United States to deal with a politically or economically, with that Europe. For should Hitler become the unquestioned master of the Old World the United States would become the sole remaining democracy, the last hope of freedom, a permanent challenge, by its very existence, to the Nazi system, and, let it not be forgotten, the richest of all prizes it overhauled. That these two diametrically opposite philosophies of government, economics and ways of life could live in perpetual peace and harmony is hard to believe. But we certainly had no difficulty in doing so when Europe was "dominated" by England and France.

Sumners resolution "that would arbitrarily limit representation to the House."

Original Measure Favored

Action by the organizations, it was said, "is the result of the belief of members throughout the United States that there is no valid reason why large numbers of permanent citizens in the District should be disfranchised."

The Sumners resolution, as introduced, the communication to Congress said, "would leave the decision the kind of representation to the Congress, which seems a much more desirable Constitutional provision."

The communication was signed by Dr. Alma J. Speer, Jr., American Women's Medical Association; Nettie Podell Ottenberg, National Council of Jewish Women; Louise G. Baldwin, National League of Women Voters; Harriet S. Noble, National Service Star Legion; Elizabeth Christman, National Women's Trade Union League, and Dr. Julia M. Green, Women's National Homeopathic Medical Fraternity.

Odd Jobs

'Watcher' Starts Men And Engines to Fires

By George Thorpe.

A man bends over a desk, watching a strip of ticker tape. Suddenly, he jumps to his feet, flashes a glance at a string of numerals on a wall chart and reaches for a bell switch!

An excited broker preparing to "sell out"? No, this is a District Fire Department "watcher," about to send engines screaming past your house, to interrupt your sleep and perhaps save your neighbor's life and home.

By day and night in each of the Capital's 30 engine and 15 truck companies, at rescue squad headquarters, and on the Fire-fighter, antiquated fire boat, a fireman keeps "watch" over the alarm system, nerve center and pulse of the Fire Department.

Out at Engine Co. No. 31, Connecticut avenue and Everett street northwest, the other day, the man on watch was Sergt. Paul Stafford.

Sergt. Paul Stafford Reading Alarm Signals

ford, of 3625 Ingomar street northwest, 41-year-old veteran of 15 years with Washington's fire-fighting forces.

It was mid-afternoon and Stafford was standing a watch of an hour and 40 minutes but before his 14-hour shift was over he was to take an even more important night watch of two hours. (The hours between 10 p. m. and 7 a. m. when the most people are at home are those in which fire casualties are highest.)

Stafford explained how the alarm system works: Each of those alarm boxes you see at street corners is designated by a number by which it can be located immediately at the various fire stations.

The box one block away from No. 31, at Connecticut avenue and Bavenport street, for example, is No. 791. And all boxes in the sector covered by that company have the initial number 7.

Accordingly when the tape starts moving and comes out perforated by seven holes, the watcher sounds the station bell that starts his mates racing to their engine posts. Another glance shows the tape is now punctured nine times, then once, giving the location. Meanwhile, a small "joker bell" is confirming the 7-9-1 alarm.

In the space of five seconds Stafford has turned out the station personnel, within 30, the shiny red engines are roaring off to the fire.

The same alarm rings simultaneously in other engine and truck companies. Other watchers turn out other apparatus so that for every one-alarm fire (or false alarm) three engine companies (pumpers or hose wagons), two trucks (hook-and-ladder) and one of Washington's seven battalion chiefs dash to the scene.

A decade ago the watcher remained behind when his colleagues turned out. Nowadays, as soon as he has rung the bell summoning his mates, he too, jumps into his boots and runs to his position. It may be on a pumper, a rescue squad ambulance, or on one of the water towers capable of throwing a stream over the 13-floor National Press Building.

All firemen are kept on their toes for watch duty by daily "skull practice" on alarm codes in exactly the same way, a football team rehearses signals. But most watchers know the boxes by heart and do not need to look at the charts.

As Stafford puts it, "When the tape and joker bell start going, we're supposed to start going, too—to the right fire at the right time, and the right time is immediately."

Guardsmen Rushes From War Maneuvers To Cheer 12-Year-Old Son in Battle for Life

HOLDING HIS OWN—Sergeant William B. Shanahan, with Mrs. Shanahan at the bedside of their son, William, Jr., in Providence Hospital. Sergeant Shanahan was called from National Guard maneuvers in upper New York State yesterday to be with his son, battling against a virulent bone infection.

A District National Guardsman who quit New York Army maneuvers to rush here to the bedside of his stricken 12-year-old son was at Providence Hospital yesterday, comforting the boy in his battle for life.

Sergeant William B. Shanahan, of the 104th Quartermaster's Corps, arrived in Washington at 2:55 a. m. yesterday to find William, Jr., holding his own in his fight against a virulent bone infection.

His return was the happy sequel to three days of frantic and unsuccessful effort by Mrs. Gladys Shanahan to reach him and bring him to the bedside of the lad, then critically ill. Although Sergeant Shanahan had been at the Army camp a week, telegrams and letters failed to reach him because the military postoffice had not been opened at Rensselaer Falls, N. Y.

Long-distance telephone calls likewise were unavailing. The Rensselaer operator insisted that "Sergeant Shanahan won't arrive until Wednesday."

In a strange circumstance, the father of the sick boy had been confused with his brother, Robert, also a sergeant, and also with the 104th. Robert Shanahan will not arrive at the New York encampment until Wednesday.

A telegram finally reached the father on Monday. He entrained immediately for Washington.

And last night there was a slight flush in the wan cheeks of the youngster, who two weeks ago outdistanced all competitors in his class to win the medal in the 60-yard dash in a city-wide playground track meet.

It was there that William's infection got its start, Mrs. Shanahan thinks. She believes he bruised his leg in another event—the broad jump.

Last night, Mrs. Shanahan would not say her son was out of danger. She said, however, that he had improved after transfusions, with blood donated by herself and two of the youth's uncles.

In his bed in a second-floor ward, William attempted a smile as his mother and father came and stood by his bedside. It was obvious he liked the idea of reinforcements in the battle.

Defense Sidelights

Governor Declares Hawaii Impregnable; Breakdowns Slow Motorized Artillery Unit

New York, Aug. 6 (AP)—Gov. Joseph B. Poinexter, of Hawaii, said today he believed the Hawaiian Islands "impregnable from attack by any power."

"If they are not impregnable now," he said, "they will be when the program now under way is completed."

Defense preparations include construction of Hickam Field, which he described as the largest military airport under the United States flag.

He predicted the November referendum on the question of statehood would carry despite "a good deal of opposition."

Breakdowns Slow Motorized Troops

Bedford, Pa., Aug. 6 (AP)—In a speed test for men and machines, a motorized National Guard unit equipped in the fashion of Europe's mechanized armies, covered 135 miles in eight hours and 13 minutes today.

Mechanical trouble and a detour delayed the journey three hours longer than the original schedule, causing Maj. Theodore S. Paul, of Philadelphia, who conducted the test, to report:

"It is fairly obvious that for any extended movement the equipment was not wholly adequate."

Eighty-five miles of the route was over Pennsylvania's still incomplete $70,000,000 express highway.

The average speed of the trip was 16 miles an hour. The unit consisted of 25 motor vehicles and six 155-millimeter howitzers drawn by six-wheel drive trucks.

U. S. Seeks Sites For Growing Rubber

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace disclosed yesterday that two Agriculture Department exploration parties are now in Latin America conducting surveys to determine the most promising areas for the production of rubber.

A third party, he said, is on its way to survey the headwaters of the Amazon River tributaries. The two already at work are covering northwestern Central America and southeastern Central America and parts of Colombia.

Sponsors hope eventually to make the Western Hemisphere less dependent upon the Orient for rubber supplies.

South Leads In Army Recruiting

Atlanta, Aug. 6 (AP)—While Congress debates conscription, a record-breaking flood of volunteers from the deep South is giving the present fighting force of the United States a strong Southern accent.

The Fourth Corps area, embracing all the "Confederate" States except Virginia, Texas and Arkansas, enrolled 2,033 volunteers in one week last month—a record for the United States in peacetime and a third of the national total.

Since the current recruiting campaign started May 16, enlistments in the Fourth Corps area have averaged 1,500 a week, compared to 200 to 300 in New England and the New York area.

Next to the Fourth Corps area, most volunteers have come from the Eighth Corps area, composed of Texas, New Mexico, Colorado, Oklahoma and Arizona. The Fifth Corps area of Kentucky, West Virginia, Ohio and Indiana is third.

Civilian Pilots Increase 56.3 Per

The number of certified civilian airplane pilots in the United States increased 56.3 per cent—from 26,144 to 41,006—from July 1, 1939, to July 1, 1940, the Civil Aeronautics Authority reported yesterday.

Dr. Melo Flying Here To Meet With Welles

Chief of Argentine Delegation to Havana Parley Will Arrive Today for Conference At Oxon Hill Home of Undersecretary

By Dudley Harmon

Dr. Leopoldo Melo, chief of the Argentine delegation to the Havana Conference, who discussed Pan-American problems there with Secretary Hull and day before yesterday with President Roosevelt, will get together here tonight with a third leading exponent of American foreign policy—Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State.

Dr. Melo lands by plane from New York late this afternoon and will be taken to the Oxon Hill country home of Mr. and Mrs. Welles for dinner. The Argentine Ambassador, Felipe Epil, also will be present.

Another veteran of the Havana Conference is due here tonight—Dr. Oscar Schnake, Chilean Minister for Development, and his wife. She is a former Mayor of Santiago, the first woman to hold that position in South America, says the embassy here. In most South American countries women are not encouraged to take part in public affairs, but in Chile the ladies are allowed to cast their ballots at least in municipal elections, if not national.

Senora on First Visit to U. S.

This is Senora de Schnake's first visit to the United States, but she speaks perfect English. Politics and social welfare are her chief interests. Her husband's job is a sort of combination of our Department of Commerce and Public Works Administration. The couple will stay at the Chilean Embassy with Ambassador Cerezo, whose wife is en route to Mexico for a visit. The Schnakes went to Hyde Park to see the President. Immediately after Dr. Melo's dinner at Oxon Hill tonight, he will entrain for New York to sail Friday with several other Havana delegates who came to this country to make good boat connections to South America.

Dr. Melo's host tonight speaks perfect Spanish, a definite advantage, as the Argentine lawyer's conversations with the President and Mr. Hull had to be carried on through an interpreter. Incidentally, Mariano Zuberbühler, who married the former Margot Garrett of Washington, served in this capacity.

The Secretary of State will not see Dr. Melo on this trip, as with the devoted Mrs. Hull he has gone to White Sulphur Springs for two solid weeks of rest.

Epils to Leave Soon for Vacation

Ambassador Epil, who went to Havana, is also due for a vacation, and with Senora de Epil will leave in a day or so for Hot Springs.

Another South American on a flying trip to the Capital was Brazil's delegate to the conference, Mauricio Nabuco. Down from New York yesterday for a few hours, he lunched at the embassy with the Ambassador and staff members. Senor Nabuco, who is Undersecretary of State for his country, is of particular interest here because he is also the son of Brazil's first Ambassador to the United States. His late father was in Washington at the turn of the century and did much to further Brazilian-American relations.

Plans Trip in Fall

Underwood & Underwood

Although Mrs. Neville S. Godwin is a bride of only a few days the wedding trip has been deferred until September when Mr. Godwin, an attaché at the British Embassy, can get leave. The couple were married here on Saturday, August 3. The former Mrs. Kathleen Blake arrived here from England in July. Mr. Godwin came to the Capital in June to assume his new duties at the embassy. They have taken an apartment in Washington.

The Hunt Country

SIX ENGLISH refugees are enjoying the peace and quiet of the hunt country while staying at Little Outlands, the home of Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis, near Warrenton, Va. Mrs. Eustis, with her son, Morton Eustis, is spending the month of August at Southampton, Long Island, where she has taken a house.

The Britons arrived in New York last week and came straight to Virginia. They were greeted there by Mrs. David Edward Finley, daughter of Mrs. Eustis, who is stopping at Outlands House in Virginia for the summer. She is joined on week-ends by her husband. The visitors, who are cousins of Mrs. Eustis, include Mrs. James Annesley and her daughter, Mrs. Christopher Burdison, who is accompanied by her two children, Celia and John. Two other children, grandsons of Mrs. Annesley, are in the group. They are Desmond Norman and his brother, Parquill Norman. They all plan to remain here for the duration of the war.

Mrs. Edwin Conquest and her two sons, Fairfax and Ned, of Richmond, are visiting Mrs. Conquest's mother, Mrs. Henry Fairfax, at Oakham, near Middleburg. They will remain in Loudoun while Mr. Conquest is at Plattsburg, N. Y., with the Virginia National Guard for maneuvers. Miss Anne Lee Blackwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Karl Blackwell, of Richmond, formerly of Fauquier county, has been visiting Miss Madeline Drake at her home, Humblestone, in Warrenton. Miss Blackwell was honor guest at a dinner party recently given by Miss Drake.

MISS PRICILLA MACY, of New York, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. John C. Butler, at Kelvedon Farm, Rectortown. With Miss Sarah Warren, of Warrenton, she recently returned from a visit with Mrs. Ruth Lester Buchanan in Washington.

Miss Helen Miller, of Richmond, has returned to her home after a visit with Mrs. Hanson Ely, Jr., and her son, Hanson Ely 3d, at their home Nordley in Upperville. Mrs. W. T. Seiden, of Richmond, is visiting Mrs. Charles Turner at Rocky House, the Plains.

VISITORS FROM Washington have arrived lately in great variety at Rehoboth. Robert Pell, of the State Department, came down for a few days to install his daughter, Stephanie, at the Henlopen Hotel, where she will spend a fortnight while recovering from an operation on her knee. Stephanie, who is subdebutante age and just graduated from Miss Madeira's School, is very plucky and doesn't seem to mind having one leg in a plaster cast. She sits in a wheelchair on the boardwalk and receives visitors as if the whole thing were a lark. Among those calling on the invalid are Mrs. McCeney Werlich and her son, Bobbie.

Mrs. Werlich is an old friend of Stephanie's mother, the former Alice Harding, of Washington, now Mrs. Julian Allen. In answer to inquiries about her mother, Stephanie says that she is visiting her sister, Mrs. Vadim Makaroff, the former Lysette Harding, at Southampton. Mrs. Allen arrived as a refugee from France on the Washington and is happy to be settled on Long Island with her children, Billy Pell, Elizabeth Allen and her baby son, born soon after her return to America.

THE TRAGEDY OF Mrs. Allen's flight is, not that she had to leave her worldly possessions and her home, a charming little chateau near Deauville, but that she doesn't at the moment know where her husband is. Until further news she is just "somewhere in France."

Accompanying Mr. Pell and Stephanie to Rehoboth were M. and Mme. Coulon, who have recently arrived from France. M. Coulon, who made the trip to America on business, is familiar with Washington, having accompanied M. Beranger to the Capital in 1936 on the French commission which came to discuss war debts. Mme. Coulon is petite of figure and has soft brown eyes and naturally curly brown hair. During her visit she is going in for everything American and when last seen was in a boardwalk restaurant happily eating what she called "les hot dogs."

GLENN ABBEY, of the State Department, accompanied by George Williams, spent two days at the Henlopen Hotel. These two visitors, who came to discuss war debts, are familiar with Washington, having accompanied M. Beranger to the Capital in 1936 on the French commission which came to discuss war debts. Mme. Coulon is petite of figure and has soft brown eyes and naturally curly brown hair. During her visit she is going in for everything American and when last seen was in a boardwalk restaurant happily eating what she called "les hot dogs."

MR. AND MRS. Robert Fleming gave a large and gay weekend dinner party at the Rehoboth Hotel Beach Club. One of their guests was Representative Charles A. Halleck, of Indiana, who was introduced to the club at large by the club's master of ceremonies, Bob Dracoli, of the man who nominated Wendell Willkie for President. Whereupon Mr. Halleck made a nice, and very short, little speech through the microphone borrowed from the orchestra's crooner, and the evening resolved into a "Hooray for Willkie" meeting. Here and there a determined "Hooray for Roosevelt" broke the continuity of the cheers and one-man, after a look at the diners and dancers at the club was heard to remark rather cynically, "Whenever I see people drinking champagne and putting their heads together I know they're complaining about their taxes and planning to vote for Willkie."

A WOMAN'S WASHINGTON

By JEAN BROWNELL

Training Under Doris Humphrey at U. of Md. Is an Utter Thrill for Student Dancers

If you're a violinist, picture yourself spending the day with Kreisler; if you play the piano, imagine a week-long lesson from Paderewski. Then you have some idea of how 45 dance enthusiasts feel about studying with Doris Humphrey, Charles Weidman and other luminaries of the dance world during a six-week summer school course at the University of Maryland. Supervisor of the course is Gwendolyn Drew, women's physical education director for the university. Evelyn Davis, president of the Washington Dance Association, helps the students with their original compositions; Elizabeth M. Andrews, principal of Bancroft School here, gives informal lectures on technique and teaching methods.

Each "guest artist" spends a week at the school. The morning after Doris Humphrey arrived, she was brushing her teeth in the girls' dormitory when one of her prospective pupils burst in. The girl stared for a moment at the dancer, who was clad in a slip and frothing slightly at the mouth. "Oh, Miss HUMPHREY," she said humbly, "... It IS Miss Humphrey, isn't it?"

The dancers, most of whom teach physical education back home, represent 13 States. The 35 girls are holding up better than the male students. A Baltimore man returned home after a hard workout the first day and has never been heard from since. "I'm rather afraid to inquire about him," Miss Davis says. If you wonder what she means, just take a look at the surviving students' adhesive patches and bruises, and the pools of perspiration they leave on the gym floor.

Fat O'Malley, crack press agent for the Civil Aeronautics Authority, apparently swears her success to wide research work. On her desk, between such technical volumes as "How To Be An Aviator" and "Safety in the Air" is a copy of "Tom Swift and His Sky Racer."

FEMININE FAN most familiar to the Washington baseball team is Virginia Patton, of 3920 McKinley street northwest. For the last five years she's attended an average of five home games a week. She traces her enthusiasm to the days when her brother was active in college baseball. She always sits in a rightfield box, which she finds furnishes the best view of the game and, on Fridays, keeps her at a safe distance from the Ladies' Day crowd, which bores her. Even in exciting moments, she raises less rumpus than many a male rooter. Buddy Lewis has her vote as most valuable player on the team. She never joins in the scramble for foul balls; "it's easier to ask for them," she's found.

Washingtonians who own stock in the Ford Motor Co. Limited, had to take sides in the European war this month. Before the current dividend checks were mailed, stockholders were required to send the company a statement that they are not enemies of the British Empire and that no part of the dividends would be made available to Britain's enemies. The precaution was required under the provisions of the British Trading with the Enemy Act.

REALTY NOTE—A sign posted in the lobby of a local apartment house reads, "No children, dogs or wild parties."

Beauty Secrets

By Carolyn Abbott

Perfumed Deodorants

PERSONAL daintiness is essential to beauty. But don't forget that it's as important to be as clean as you look. Take all the extra baths you like; pay special attention to the freshness of your clothes; do whatever you can to keep yourself fresh and cool, there's still the insidious matter of perspiration odor to combat.

All the baths and splashings of eau de cologne in the world won't help more than a few hours unless you use a good antiperspirant. There are many new deodorants now on the market. Some are perfumed. One deodorant is made with a greaseless vanishing cream base. The cream disappears and leaves a pleasing fragrance. It is said (by the makers) to be harmless to fabrics and safe to use daily.

There is also a perfumed deodorant in liquid form. It comes in a variety of scents that blend with your perfume or toilet water. For example, there is "Tumble Weed," a fresh, outdoor odor.

How often you apply a perspiration check depends entirely upon how freely you perspire. In extremely hot summer, once or twice a day is not too often. When cooler weather comes, an application every three days should be sufficient to ward off noxious body odors.

Column Readers Give Advice to 'Vida Victoria,' Who Is Happily Married and Exceedingly Bored And Eager to Overcome Her Desire to Flirt

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: May I add a bit of comment to your splendid answer of August 2 to "Vida Victoria?" Her statement that she dimly grasps what she must do (in order to overcome her latterday temptation to kick over the traces of her monotonously happy marriage), without having the least idea how to go about it, makes me wonder if such a mental lightweight would be able to assimilate your sound advice.

That period of automatic mental and physical growth that comes during adolescence seems to be about all the growth most women ever experience, judging from the tone of their letters to you. Life's law is progression. Either you progress or you regress. Which explains why the wife a man marries when both are young seldom satisfies him after he passes the age of 30.

Any man worth his salt—which means a man who is able to hold his own professionally in this keenly competitive world—never rests from the self-appointed task of improving his mind and enlarging his outlook. But in proportion as he strives, his wife—all too often—rests on her oars, and after some years you have a married couple who are intellectual strangers.

May I recommend to "Vida Victoria" a story by Pearl Buck—"Stay As You Are." It's a fascinating yarn and, very instructive, if read with understanding. It told me, among other things, that only a mentally and spiritually mature person can create, or share, a richly satisfying life. Such a person commands situations; and with you are in conscious command of situations you know no fear.

ARDENT READER.

She Obtained Divorce; Thanks Heaven for It

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: One of the nice features about the Hotel New Yorker is the fact that it delivers The Washington Post to my room every morning—which explains how I happened to see your correspondence of August 2 with "Vida Victoria," who is so fed up with the tedium of her 14 years' happy marriage that she is afraid she would welcome a bit of "triangular" excitement for a change. She admits that her attitude is all wrong, and she asks how to be delivered from temptation.

Well, my reaction happens to be somewhat different from yours. I obtained a divorce just a year ago. I am still the best of friends with my husband and I see him frequently. But, thank heaven, I'm not married. I'm free to pursue life, liberty and happiness in my own way.

Although I am in complete agreement with what you say about the satisfaction which comes of doing something constructive for society, I should like to add this: One's individual temperament has almost everything to do with the pattern of one's life. There are many women who have been married for 14 years (like "Vida Victoria")—who may or may not be doing any philanthropic work of any kind—but who are completely and joyously happy in their domestic arrangement, catering to husband and children.

On the other hand, there are women who, by reason of their emotional make-up (NOT emotional immaturity), could be doing all sorts of wonderful work for humanity and still be spiritually starved and unhappy. I was such a woman. And I assure you that, for the past year, since getting my divorce, I have been very happy, for the first time in years.

I have been busy; but not too busy to satisfy all the emotional yearnings that fretted me for years. I am taking love where I find it, as I find it, and the results, in peace of mind, are most satisfactory to me, with my particular temperament and outlook on life. Frankly, I have never been happier or in better health. Sincerely, MANHATTAN DIVORCEE.

She Lets Off Steam Writing Murder Yarns

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I believe I have a remedy for the boredom of which "Vida Victoria" complains in her letter published in your column of August 2. I tried it on myself and it worked beautifully. Here it is:

After being graduated from high school and before I found a full-time job, I had to find an outlet for my energies and imagination, so I set myself to writing detective novels. I deliberately avoided love stories, as the difference between reality and fiction made me unhappy, and I was afraid to "dream" romance, either for myself or fictional characters.

(Since then, I have found real love, I am happy to report. The reality is completely satisfactory, but still I don't care for highly improbable "love stories.") But to continue—I found perfect "escape" from the more trying aspects of reality in detective thrillers. And it may be that if "Vida Victoria" were to change her brand of reading from sentimental romances to detective stories, she would find them as absorbing and diverting as I do.

If she has a spark of imaginative, creative talent, she may be able to analyze and master the adventure-murder story formula and join the ranks of the successful fiction writers. I can recommend the works of Ellery Queen, S. S. Van Dine, Eric Stanley Gardner, Milton Propper, Phoebe Atwood Taylor, Patricia Wentworth and Mignon Eberhardt as possessing that elusive quality of color and form which characterizes the better detective or murder mysteries. The "Rogue Herries" series by Walpole and the Jaina books are equally absorbing, as well as fine examples of craftsmanship.

It wouldn't matter whether she wrote for publication or not. The fun and excitement are in the writing of the stuff. To be truthful, I have never yet tried to sell mine, although I would like to, and may one day set about it. The point is—such a task would fill the time that now hangs heavily on her hands, would occupy her mind and would leave no room for erotic speculations of an upsetting sort. That's my suggestion, for what it may be worth. BOOK WORM.

Calorie Quiz Reveals Much About Reducing

By Ida Jean Kain

QUIZZES seem to be a popular form of diversion—and most people pride themselves on their knowledge of food. So here is an easy way to find what you know about reducing! And it may give you a clue to your problems.

Run through the list of questions and check your replies, then read the answers given below.

1. Which is more fattening, sugar or butter?
2. Which uses the most calories, dishwashing, ironing, or typing?
3. Are lemons reducing?
4. Are alcohol calories stored as fat?
5. Is fat sometimes inherited?
6. Do smart housewives add soda to vegetables to preserve their fresh, green color?
7. Are there more fat men or more fat women?
8. On the average, when is the weight most gained—between the ages of 25 and 30; 30 and 40; 40 and 50?
9. Which is more fattening, a glass of grapejuice or a glass of whole milk?
10. Could you eat nothing but desserts and reduce?
11. Can you speed up reducing by cutting down on sleep?
12. All right, here are the answers. See how you made out.

1. Butter is more than twice as fattening as sugar. One ounce of butter contains 2½ times as many calories as 1 ounce of sugar.

2. Maybe this one fooled you! They all use the same number of calories—85 calories per pound per hour.

3. No. Neither lemons nor any other food is reducing.

4. Alcohol calories cannot be turned into fat. But while you are burning the alcohol for energy, food calories are spared and stored as fat. If you didn't eat, you wouldn't gain—but you would develop a dietary deficiency, for alcohol contains none of the repair materials needed by the body.

5. No. One may inherit a tendency to put on weight easily, but fat itself is not inherited. Only excess food can cause excess weight.

6. No. The best housewives know that the addition of soda causes the rapid destruction of the vitamins.

7. Statistics prove that fat women are in the majority.

8. Statistics also reveal that the average weight gain is greatest between the ages of 30 and 40.

9. One 8-ounce glass of grapejuice contains the same number of calories as an 8-ounce glass of whole milk—160 calories.

10. Yes, you could if you kept your calorie intake sufficiently low. But without the protective foods you would lose your health and looks.

Fresh Shades For Lamps Will Revive a Room

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

A LADY can wear a good coat or suit for years, providing she keeps her hats in the latest style. The same thing goes for a room. The basic furnishings needn't be changed often, but watch out to keep the lamps looking fresh and fashionable or the room will begin to look dated in no time.

That sounds more extravagant than we mean it to be. Fine lamp bases can usually survive many a cycle of fashion—it's the shades that need watching. But the cheaper bases reflect fads, and since their investment doesn't involve much replace them too.

Smart lamps now are big to start with and they have that I. E. S. indirect lighting unit that diffuses the light and eliminates those harsh shadows. And they have a crisp look whether they're white or pastel. Or a gleaming look if they're metal. Or the mellow look of woods and wood tones. And they're positive, dominant details, not the indecisive notes as they were a few years back.

While white shades still lead, there are dramatic dark shades for regency rooms, with punch-work or gold trimmings. Many dark shades are sprayed with gold or with another color in the room, creating a beaked effect. Rose shades, whose romantic numbers of the early nineteenth-century, are coming back, says an important designer, but in more sophisticated versions. Decalcomania de-

For Black Frocks White Touches

Sparkling touches of embroidery at neck, pockets and sleeves is the high light of the sleek black dresses that are appearing everywhere. Tiny points of white; a white tailored band or a dainty scallop of embroidery are used to break the hard line between fabric and neck in the high-necked numbers.

The schoolgirl is buying lots of sweaters, the little pique vestie collars to wear with sweaters.

For a first-class freshen-upper, use bits of dainty neckwear—cool, crisp, fresh. It keeps away that melted look that silk, linen or cotton dresses take on under the hot sun's merciless rays.

Pique lats and bags that launder may be purchased to match collars and cuffs. They are new, smart and very cool-looking. There is nothing more appealing than the girl who manages to look immaculate on hot days. It's a trick, and an achievement.

Byrnes Accuses Willkie Forces of Coercing Employees

Tuttle closed his letter with this question:

"What is it worth to you?" "When the vice president and treasurer asks 'What is it worth to you?' the employees know that it is worth their jobs to refuse to contribute," Senator Byrnes continued. "They believe their chances of promotion depend upon the amount they pay."

"While this is the only corporation to which I have proof, I fear others are resorting to similar methods. . . . While Mr. Willkie is publicly professing that he wishes to restrict contributions, his corporate friends are coercing their employees."

"Only to Key Men"

Chairman Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, said the campaign expenditures committee would consider the case.

In Detroit, Tuttle was quoted last night as saying he hoped the publicity given the letter "will make a lot more people contribute to the campaign."

Tuttle said that the letters had gone "only to key men in the State of Michigan," fewer than 1 per cent of Kresge's total number of employees, which he placed at 25,000 or 30,000, and that none were sent to women employees.

Tuttle said he was interested in supporting Willkie because "I'm worried about that big debt that has been mounting for the last five years."

"The Power of Money"

The Attorney General's proposal for Hatch Act changes was prompted by Fletcher's opinion that since gifts to local and State political committees are exempted, the $5,000 limitation on personal contributions might be avoided by subdividing donations between national and local committees.

Jackson wrote to Hatch that "if the Fletcher plan is to stand, the hope of checking the power of money over American elections by means of the Hatch Act limitations is gone."

Hatch said later he favored a provision under which all campaign donations would be made to the national committees.

Campaign Books Brought Up

Halleck's statement against Jackson also mentioned the campaign books matter, asking "when is Mr. Jackson going to act against the Democratic National Committee for the pernicious sale of advertising in convention campaign books—not to mention the sale of such books at $250, each autographed by the President?"

Van Nuys' reply to Guffey's charge that Willkie had changed his name said:

"Having known Wendell Willkie since his birth, visited his parental home, practiced law at the same bar with his father and mother for many years and being proud of the success of this Hoosier boy, I denounce this attack of Senator Guffey as untrue and as dirty, mendacious partisan politics."

Van Nuys said he knew Willkie had never changed his name.

Representative Martin, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Republican National Committee, conferred with leaders of war veteran groups regarding organization of former service men in support of the Willkie-McNary ticket. The conferees included Harry W. Colmery, former national commander of the American Legion; Representative Van Zandt, of Pennsylvania, three times national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; and Edward F. McGinnis, past commander of the Cook County (Ill.) Council of the American Legion. The chairman also received word from Henry Parkman, of Boston, Republican candidate for the Senate, that the party's prospects in Massachusetts were "excellent."

ly sometimes confused with the kinkajou. Gathering these beasts, along with scores of parakeets, parrots, crocodiles, mongooses, monkeys, frogs, lizards and others, resulted in the following incidents, to cite a few:

A narrow escape by Dr. Mann from accidental poisoning.

Initiation of Dr. and Mrs. Mann into a wild tribe deep in the Liberian jungle.

Mrs. Mann's narrow escape when a swinging rattan bridge she was about to cross collapsed under the weight of a native porter, plunging him into a swollen stream 20 feet below.

Escapes from Python

A cold reception in Dakar, French West Africa, on the home-ward voyage because the colony, which a few days earlier had witnessed the bombing of the French warship Richelieu by British planes, was suspicious of visitors.

Norris, a veteran keeper at the Washington Zoo, escaping from the deadly coils of a huge python after it had inflicted a bite which he described as "very aching, nothing to it."

A visit by "the country devil," which is the English translation of the native name of a sort of medicine man who coaches the tribal males in the ways of life during which instruction period they are cloistered in the jungle for three years.

"It was a trip we can never forget," said Mrs. Mann, a recognized zoologist and author in her own right, who has accompanied the Zoo director on previous expeditions to Asia, South America, the East Indies and elsewhere.

Natives Can't Understand It

"Amen," sighed her husband, as he lay on a bed in the Marine Hospital seeking to regain some of his lost strength before sailing for Washington on the home stretch. "Collecting animals in Liberia, I found, is very tough, indeed."

"Maybe the main reason for that is that the natives can't comprehend why anyone should travel thousands of miles to catch things they're interested in only as food. Their idea of hunting—even the boys whom we hired—is to slug the animals with cutlasses. Any number of good things were killed by them, or so badly maimed they had to be destroyed."

Dr. Mann's escape from poisoning—his wife shuddered as she told the story—occurred one day in the jungle as the result of a servant's carelessness. The latter had poured a glassful of a strong antiseptic (bichloride of mercury), to be used as a hand cleanser, and let it lie on a table while he went out of doors.

Dr. Mann came in and, unaware of the native boy's operations and mistaking the tumbler's contents for a beverage, raised the glass to his lips and was about to drink when the youth, reentering the cabin at that moment, casually called out to the expedition leader not to down the mixture because it was poison.

Received With Suspicion

The Manns' initiation into the jungle tribe climaxed a laborious safari into Liberia's deepest bush. The couple were transported in a hammock borne on the shoulders of porters. At first received with suspicion and distrust, the pale-skinned visitors all but owned the settlement when they left.

Mrs. Mann made light of the incident in which she came within a few moments of plunging into a stream.

"It happened on our last trip into the bush," she said. "I suppose," she laughed, "if it had happened earlier in the expedition I would never have trusted myself to those flimsy, swinging bridges. Some were only a foot or so wide and they had no guard rails."

The native boy who fell into the stream when that one bridge collapsed was not seriously hurt, she explained.

The West Irmo, with its oddly assorted contents of wild animals and $400,000 in mahogany, largest cargo of its kind ever received in Norfolk, left Monrovia, Liberia, on July 15. Five days later she sailed from Dakar, West Africa, shortly after the British had put the French battle cruiser Richelieu hors de combat with a few well placed depth bombs.

He Wants a Permit

"In Dakar we couldn't even get matches to take aboard," said Dr. Mann, who happens to be a chain smoker. "At first I was told I would not be allowed to go ashore but I finally wangled a permit."

"I asked a ship's agent whether Dakar was French, British or German. He replied, 'I don't know, you'll have to wait until the government returns if you really want to find out.'"

Tomorrow morning the newly acquired animals, gifts to Washington by the grace of Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., which financed the expedition, will be placed on exhibition at the Zoo in the Nation's Capital.

'Slacker' Charge Hurlled in Senate Debate

leagues before Holt was allowed to proceed.

Barkley was forced to intervene again at the close of the turbulent session when Holt said, "Of course, those present can tell what's wrong with the Senator from Indiana."

Discourtesies Exchanged

"The people of West Virginia already have found out what's wrong with Mr. Holt," Minton replied. Holt was defeated for re-election in the West Virginia primaries.

"The Senator from Indiana is not in shape to be on the floor," Holt roared.

"What do you mean by that?" thundered Minton, banging his fists on a desk.

Barkley and Minority Leader McNary, over protests from both Minton and Holt, gained the floor to divert the Senate's attention by announcing an agreement to limit debate today on the National Guard bill yesterday in the bitter clash over bill.

The Guard bill, almost forgotten in the Senate, is expected to pass the Senate by a big majority today.

The only opposition to the measure on the floor yesterday came from Senator Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa. Gillette, a World War Infantry captain and former National Guard officer, contended that many guardsmen had enlisted with the understanding they would be called into Federal service only in time of war.

Protests 'This Crime'

"Even if there were 95 Senators supporting this bill," Gillette said, "I could not see a crime like this committed without protesting."

The pending resolution, which won unanimous approval from the Senate Military Affairs Committee last week, would empower the President to order out the National Guard and Army Reserve personnel for a year's training. The House Military Affairs Committee is expected to act on a similar resolution today.

The House committee yesterday voted, 11 to 10, against summoning more witnesses on the conscription bill. Draft opponents had urged a hearing for former Secretary of War Woodring, who advocates further trial of the voluntary enlistment system.

Representative Faddis is reported to have declared that Republicans are playing politics with the conscription issue and "leading us down the same path that France followed—to its death."

"Down the Same Road"

"And you are leading us down the same road as Germany," replied Representative Short (Republican), of Missouri, adding that he was ready at any time to compare his own patriotism with that of Faddis. Holt told the Senate that the conscription drive was launched at a May meeting in the New York Harvard Club, where representatives of powerful business and banking interests pledged $250,000 to promote draft legislation.

"Conscription didn't come from labor," he cried. "It didn't come from the Main streets of this country or from the farms. It came from those individuals who have interests to protect in this war and, if necessary to protect them, they are willing to sacrifice American boys on European battlefields as they did in the last war."

Holt retorted to Minton's "slacker" charges with a statement that his father had enlisted for service in the Civil War at the age of 13, opposed American entry into the World War "and had enough courage to stand up for his opinions." He denied that his father ever advised West Virginians not to grow food after the United States went into the war.

Praised for War Work

His brother, he stated, received a letter from the War Department praising his work as an engineer in the construction of Army camps during the war period. (The Senator himself was only 13 years old in 1917.)

When Minton rose late in the session to read from photostatic copies of a West Virginia newspaper which he said supported his accusations, Holt said the press account was untrue and that he would offer full refutation in the Senate today.

"Of course, these false statements, like lies, continue to be carried by rats," the West Virginian added. During a lull in the Minton-Holt duel, Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, took the floor to rebuke Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, for his denunciation of Col. Charles Lindbergh as "chief of the Fifth Column in this country."

Urges Moderation

Pepper made the charge Monday after Lindbergh had asserted Sunday that the United States could live in harmony with a victorious Nazi Germany.

Renewing his attacks on the conscription bill, Wheeler said the Government "is offering business every inducement to take part in the defense program. Business is even saying that unless you repeal some of this social legislation, they won't cooperate. But now you propose to compel thousands of young men to take military training at $21 a month. You're not giving them a chance to volunteer—you're clamping down on them right now."

Goofy Musical-Comedy Uproots Those 'Ramparts'

'Boys From Syracuse' Tomorrow at Keith's;
Mr. Lust to Import a Stage Novelty;
This, That and the Other About the Theater

A VAGRANT PHOPHECY made here a few days ago that "The Ramparts We Watch" might find itself the beneficiary of a more limited public than was at first suspected seems to have been borne out. This valiant object lesson in the capacity of the United States to meet a national emergency will complete its run at RKO-Keith's Theater tonight, after two full weeks of continuous showings.

Tomorrow morning "The Boys From Syracuse" will be broken out on the Fifteenth street screen for the first time in the Capital. It will be found in violent contrast with "Ramparts," although not without its social, economic and political implications, expressed in terms of ridiculous satire and bawling burlesque. As ruler of Ephesus, Mr. Charles Butterworth will be found to entertain views on taxation and the problems of raising money for the public weal that are almost as cockeyed as some of the present day practices unpopularity in vogue.

But perhaps enough already has appeared in this space concerning "The Boys" to carry over until the film is reviewed here Friday morning. What hasn't been disclosed heretofore is that the companion attraction on the new Keith bill will be "The March of Time," new release devoted to "Spoils of Conquest," having to do particularly with the Dutch East Indies and the present problems they present in the international scheme of things.

Perhaps only the keen students of geography and world possessions are aware that more than 20,000 abundantly fertile islands comprise the Dutch East Indies and that at one point they are only 40 miles distant from this country's Philippines. They are the chief source of income of the Netherlands, now in control of Hitler and his Nazis—so you see...

There is a reunion of distinguished British acting talents in "Pride and Prejudice," now at the Palace, which, apparently has gone unnoticed. Two of the principal male roles are played by Edmund Gwenn and Melville Cooper. It was these two who did most to salvage J. H. Priestley's "Laburnum Grove" on the side of interesting and entertaining when that deceptive play was presented for the first time in Washington on the stage of the National Theater. In the reading of "Laburnum Grove" left more than a little to be desired and created a profound wonderment as to how it ever could be transmuted into a lively character behind the footlights. The Messrs. Gwenn and Cooper were the ones who more than any others in the cast demonstrated that all the play needed was adult reading. That they gave it. Incidentally, they are contributing the same values to their present assignments in the Jane Austen fiction.

Bette Davis is taking time off from her acting duties to become a theatrical producer. Ostensibly, she is on vacation. In fact, she is founding the Sugar Hill Players, recruiting the group from among her New Hampshire neighbors. A small theater is being constructed on her farm to house the organization. So the mail carrier takes a walk on his day off!

The annual meeting of the Warner Brothers theater managers, representing the States of Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia, was held yesterday in the Warner executive offices in the Earle Theater Building. The assembled theater operators were addressed by Zone Manager John J. Payette and the heads of all the home office executive departments. As usual, the conclave is being brought to a close by a day's outing at Bauer's Beach, on the Chesapeake, with the Washington branch film exchange managers as guests of the Warnerites.

Sidney B. Lust, independent exhibitor and film exchange operator, is at it again. This time, he is bringing to his Cameo Theater, Mount Rainier, Md., a comedy stunt that has been a hit in Philadelphia for the past three seasons. Every Tuesday night, beginning August 13, Mr. Lust will present Jack Steek's Barter Party on the Cameo stage at 8 o'clock. Steek, well-known master of ceremonies at a Philadelphia broadcasting station, puts on a comedy auction, identical with the one he has been staging in the Quaker City's Woodside Park. The fun springs from the fact that Steek will "knock down" valuable gifts to bidders from the audience for whatever odds and ends they happen to have in their pockets. Sort of a modification of Mr. Porterfield's Barter Theater idea, down at Abingdon, Va.

It ought to be fun, at that, to win a handsome set of dishes for an old mousetrap, a bottle of ink, a hardboiled egg, or anything else you may be carrying around!

Personal-Aside-to-the-Weatherman Note

Hollywood, Aug. 6. I'm crazy about Walter Wanger's dedication for his new picture, "Foreign Correspondent."

"To the Foreign Correspondents—this motion picture is dedicated."

The falling in love of Loretta Young and Tom Lewis, who were married last Wednesday, reads just like a storybook. Loretta was having a conference with her manager, Myron Selinsky, at her home, when he looked up, saw the time, and said, "Gee Whiz! I'm late for an appointment with Tom Lewis. Would you mind if I phoned and had him come over to your house?" "Go ahead," said Loretta.

"He came, they met, she did several radio shows under his supervision, and when she was going to a rehearsal of the third show, she had a peculiar feeling and said, 'I just have a hunch that man's going to kiss me today.' So when she met him, to forestall anything of the sort—because she was happy single—she put out her hand, shook hands with him, and he went right into an embrace. It was all over then but the shouting. They won't live in the beautiful home Loretta bought. She's given that to her mother, and Tom's bought her a new home in Beverly Hills."

Washington Sees Its First Saroyan Play

By Richard L. Coe

For the second time this summer the Speech and Drama Department of Catholic University is giving Washington a production in which the proud winter season might well rejoice. The first was Sara Allgood's notable appearance in "The Faroff Hills," not even last night's sports of rain dampened the enthusiasm of 1500 Syrian Theaterites for the second, William Saroyan's "My Heart's in the Highlands." Last night's disdain of the threatening drops would have pleased even the confident Mr. Saroyan, for the same production will be on view again tonight, tomorrow and Friday in the University Theater on the campus, with professional Frederic Toomey in one of the leads.

What they saw was a quiet, pulsating love of humanity, a slight story of a boy, his father and an ancient man from an old people's home who enchanted them with his recitations from Shakespeare and his gentle bugle version of "My Heart's in the Highlands Wherever I Roam." In this first play one finds the joyous wonder that flowered to such fuller bloom in "The Time of Your Life" and the direct descendant of that first play, "Love's Old Sweet Song," one of the most enchanting plays never to hit Washington. Saroyan's next, by the way, is happily titled, "Sweeney in the Trees," which gives you an idea of an ingenious revolving stage.

Why hasn't our Capital seen a Saroyan before this? William Saroyan's most pungent gift is making little people seem real; children are some of his finest characters. And children, dear public, are permitted on the local professional scene only if protected by celluloid. "The Time of Your Life," however, may get to the National next season.

As it is, the Rev. Gilbert V. Harke's group has done its consistently workmanlike best in this notable production. First of all, Frederic Toomey, before commencing rehearsals for Maxwell Anderson's new "Journey to Jerusalem," gives the company that assurance only experience can bring. It is not the "fattest" part he has accepted, but through it he limns the hopeful courage of the play. Notable, for example, in this professional's technique was his use of expansive gestures to reach his widely scattered audience.

To sustain the mood of the play, there is but one act. Ralph Brown has designed a revolving stage to keep that act moving and it is probably the most brilliant piece of stagecraft the Syrian ever has seen.

Walter Kerr's helpful prologue is an interesting conceit, too. He gives us Saroyan himself, exuberantly played by Leo Brady, telling audience and critics how fine a play—watching it is—this repeating impressions so hurriedly recorded for the morning-after papers. The device, personally O. K.'ed by the author, introduces the novelties to the Saroyan style.

As the all-important Mr. MacGregor, Anthony Mesuri is first-rate, while Edwin Speaker's young Johnny had his happy effervescence without the traditional goodness of theatrical children. And, for the record, Eugene Brown, aged 5 months, made an incredible debut with convincing toe-stretching. Mr. Kerr has directed.

The New Yorker

By Penny Singleton

[Leonard Lyons, regular contributor of this column, is vacationing.] ANYBODY who has a chance to write a guest column takes the opportunity, I suppose, to air her pet problem, and I'm no exception. I've got "blonde" trouble.

PORTRAYING ONE YOUNG'S CHARACTER. "Blonde" is pictures and on the air has unofficially established me as sort of a general-in-chief for blondes of the Nation and from the letters my sisters and me, I've decided we're a much maligned group. Therefore, this column is being written in defense of the Nation's fair-haired girls—the blondes.

MEMORANDUM TO THE BOSSES: You're wrong when you condemn them as "gun chewing blondes." Take a survey in your own office and you'll find more gum under the desks of brunettes than you will of blondes. Blondes are just more honest about liking gum.

MEMORANDUM TO BOY FRIENDS: Blondes are not "dizzy." She probably knows more about the football game than you do, but she's giving you a chance to be the "big shot" and explain the technique of a forward pass.

MEMORANDUM TO HUSBANDS: Blondes are not extravagant. For $15, they'll come back with an outfit that looks like a French exclusive, with $1.20 change left over.

MEMORANDUM TO BROTHERS: Blondes are not weeping willow "frail" sisters. They could take you in a set of tennis any time they wished, if they weren't afraid of defeating your male ego, and just show me the brunette who can outdance her blonde sister.

MEMORANDUM TO HAIRDRESSERS: You know it really takes a blonde head to set off a coiffure. It's up to you to keep us looking ahead of the fashions.

MEMORANDUM TO BRUNETTES: Shame on you for spreading those uncomplimentary rumors about blondes. We forgive you because we know you're just jealous.

MEMORANDUM TO COLLEGE PROFESSORS: Just because she's blonde, don't get the idea she's dumb. She may not win a Phi Beta Kappa key, but she'll get the best job of the graduating class, and will probably wind up married to the president's son.

MEMORANDUM TO GENTLEMEN: You wavered for a while, but we know you still prefer us.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots
Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Aug. 6 (MS).—Good morning. Have you a cinemarella in your home? Never heard the phrase? Well, you will be hearing it within the next month, for it is the name to be given to the lucky girl selected by the Screen Publicists Guild for a LOUELLA O. PARSONS cinemarella. The members of the organization are the lads who invented the phrases "Oomph Girl," "It Girl" and "Platinum Blonde." Topnotch press agents, advertising and exploitation men will prove Hollywood has plenty of potential talent. David Branson, chairman of the publicity bureau of this guild gives a few of the rules:

Any girl now in Hollywood, 18 or over, with or without screen experience, may enter. Entrants will be judged by a committee of film executives, producers, directors and cinematographers on appearance, personality and poise. The contest will be held in the windows of the Melody Lane, at Vine and Hollywood boulevard, August 12 to 17, from 12 to 12:30 daily.

Count Kurt Krawitz von Reventlow, in New York at this moment, telephoned his estranged wife, Barbara Hutten, over the week-end, but Barbara was not at home. The chances are remote that he will come to Hollywood, although he has requested that he be allowed to see their son, Lance. According to the Danish law, under which Barbara seeks her freedom, she cannot marry until February 1, at which time she will wed Cary Grant. Barbara has made many friends in Hollywood, and it's a different girl who has come here to live among us.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Bob Riskin and Frances Robinson are in the mood, so don't be surprised if they elope any day now; Mrs. Jack Oakie enters Cedars of Lebanon tomorrow for a serious operation; Helen Vinson and Lew Ayres an unexpected twosome at Siapasi Macie's; Bubbles Schinas, who never goes to any restaurant without her mother as chaperone, lunching at the Beverly Derby with Eddy Duchin and mama. Her reconciliation with Wayne Morris looks very doubtful; Jack Warner, Jr., and Lorraine Sender, who were abashed a few months ago, have taken up where they left off.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lawrence are giving a star tomorrow in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Steinhart, United States Ambassador to Russia; Mary Lou Dix's latest boy friend is the son of the well-known architect, Frank Lloyd Wright.

That's all today. See you tomorrow!

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The sheriff's office at Saratoga has clamped down on the roulette, the faro and the dice because it all comes under the broad heading of gambling, but what are the Saratoga yearling sales supposed to be, a taffy pull?

The biggest gamble at Saratoga this month won't be the proceedings on the race track. The largest risks will be taken by the folks assembled under the huge sheds hard by the track on Nelson avenue. They are the folks who will pay hundreds of thousands of dollars for the 700 yearlings to be disposed of at the sales by silver-tongued auctioneers. They are the folks who are truly gambling.

The injunction of Col. Ed Bradley, a betting man by profession and one of the largest horse breeders in the country, hasn't seemed to deter the enthusiasm of the bidders for yearlings who in the past have paid as high as $50,000 for a 1-year-old horse that has never been on a track. Col. Bradley, you know, is the man who offers a standing bet of 6 to 1 that no horse bought at the sale will ever start in a horse race.

That isn't all that Bradley will bet. He'll lay you 15 to 1 that no horse sold at the sales will ever win a horse race. But despite Bradley, who did not amend his huge fortune by making bad bets, the sales never lack for customers. The average price paid for the intelligent racers the other night was $741, a figure below former averages, but still considerable hay, as we say in our set.

So you want to buy a race horse? Well, if you insist, the Saratoga Sales is the place. Herded into the sales shed are the progeny of the best blood lines of the turf. Cash on the line is the strict rule, and take your horse away the next day if you are the successful bidder.

You'll want a yearling that shows some spirit, of course. It's axiomatic that the extremely tranquil ones who act pet-like are not a good buy. Good pets don't make good race horses, is the rule, and like every rule it has its exception. Most notable in racing annals probably was Mrs. Bosley's Chase Me, which was ridden by her daughter as a hunter and didn't go to the races until he was four years old. Before he cut his teeth in the New York race Chase Me became one of the great handicap horses of the turf. To Mrs. Bosley he was still a pet, however. She would discharge the jockey who ever hit him with a whip. Chase Me never felt the sting of a whip. It's nice, too, to note that the yearling you buy has a nice shiny coat. That's a sign of good breeding, not infallible, but still a good sign. But it would be well to sniff a bit if you can get that close. His shiny coat, as he stands under the light of the sales ring, may be nothing more than the effects of a liberal dosage of cod liver oil, a favorite treatment of breeders with horses to sell.

Breeding courses, of course. Or perhaps you already know that. In fact, breeding is the big excuse for buying a horse. Anything less than established blood lines won't give you much of a race horse. It's nice to have your horse out of an important sire, but more important is your yearling's dam. If anything, the dam should be rated higher than the sire.

The horse you buy should not only be well fed, but he should show the effects of it in the sales ring. He will probably have been overfed for several weeks to show the desired effect, and his new-found weight probably will wear off in three weeks, but at last you'll know one thing—he eats well. Weight can always be run off a horse. The horse that is skinny is apt to be too skinny.

And, of course, there's conformation to consider. Look at your horse's legs. Outside of the fact that they are what he uses to run with, they're not important. Horse's legs at best are splendid things all out of proportion to the beast's over-all size, but there are sturdy legs and legs that are not sturdy. Most of the time you can tell by looking.

It's nice to have your race horse "high behind." That's where he gets his driving power. He shouldn't be too long barreled. That denotes a tendency to flatten out. Nor too short-coupled, either. His stride probably won't be long enough. Look your horse in the face. You can see a lot in his head even as you can see in human faces. Look for alertness and eyes that are not too close together. Just as you look for character in persons. If your horse seems small, it may be only because he is a late foal and hasn't grown to full yearling stature. But if that isn't the reason, duck the small horse. The oversized steed is out, too.

After buying your race horse, all you have to do is get him to the races. He may or may not take to a saddle, in which latter case, you've bought a dud. He may be of the wrong kind of training, either. If he breaks well, if he withstands the rigors of training, if he doesn't come down with sickness, duck his shiny bow a tendon or "All" his legs, you may have bought a pretty good race horse. But Col. Bradley still says it's 15 to 1 that he won't win a race, as of the night you bought him.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Aug. 6.—It wasn't his wife nor his incorrigible dread of Joe Louis nor his realization that the boxing customers had suffered enough from that caused Max Baer to give up plans to meet the champion this fall. It was a little thing called "the percentage," according to an urgent wire from Ancil Hoffman, Max's keeper.

From Sacramento, Hoffman wires: "Following is copy of wire sent Mike Jacobs' office today. Will you give me a quote and quote my wife in this controversy? —Dear Nat (Rogers). Received your wire and offer congratulations on your appointment as matchmaker. Warning. Look out for Uncle Mike, the Bluebeard without whiskers. He reminds me of Jesse James without a horse. Max Baer is still not a 17½ per cent fighter. He is the No. 1 contender for the heavyweight title. I turned down $50,000 guarantee from Herman Taylor, of Philadelphia, to fight Galento, in order to keep my word with Uncle Mike. I gave Mike two fights, one with Nova and the other with Galento, and I did not receive $50,000 for both these matches. That was my error.

"But now what do I get for keeping my word? Nothing but a chance to give Jacobs, Louis and company 23½ per cent and a chance to collect a lousy 17½ per cent for myself. Is this gratitude? No. Just an insult. Please have Mike release to the press the percentage he offered me for Louis fight so that the public will know both sides. Mrs. Baer is always in favor of Mike fighting Louis, but not for a Mike Jacobs, Louis and company benefit. Buddy will be out of the hospital soon and be ready for Comiskey fight any time on a month's notice."

Sounds as if the boys are ready to sign. It is feared, in case the Foster-Corn fight fails to produce a challenger who belongs in the same ring with Joseph. It's a cinch that a Louis-Baer fight in Chicago or on the coast would outdraw another Louis-Foster fight, or even a Louis-Corn fight, if Billy's margin of victory over Foster is inconspicuous or close.

Jacobs and Hoffman have no real argument. Jacobs has always leaned over backward to give the Baers "one more chance." Of course he has made dough out of the Baers, for that's his business, but until now he never heard Hoffman complain. Jacobs paid off Hoffman in cash—nearly a quarter of a million dollars—on the afternoon of the Louis-Baer fight, he recalled. And there was some doubt whether Max would show up. Hoffman demanded the guarantee, a demand that cost him and his fighter $30,000. He would have gotten that much more by taking the percentage, for this very bad fight drew $1,000,000 worth of business that night.

Jacobs, by the way, has promised Washington, D. C., a Louis-Pastor fight, if Pastor beats Corn. The Capital has been a bad fight town since boxing was legalized there six years ago. But recently the D. C. Boxing Commission lifted the ban on mixed bouts, and the game has been drawing more customers.

Jacobs probably won't go through with the fight, but if he does it will be very modestly priced. He'd like to promote a Louis match in Washington with a good charity tieup. The fact that the city has never been fight conscious piques his interest. He was telling us the other day that he had "developed" tougher towns than Washington. There are other reasons why he'd like to go to Washington. A Congressional resolution, calling for an investigation of his so-called bad influence on boxing, which is beyond being influenced, is still hanging around down there. He'd like to put a good show on, under the nose of Congress. And, another thing, he'd like to invade the backlist of his chief heckler, Lieut. Col. Heinie Miller, of the N. B. A., and stage a beat, though we assured him that Miller would cooperate generously with him.

Hoffman's telegram, decently enough, mentions Max. A nonsports fan might gain the opinion that Ancil is the one who wants more than 17½ per cent in fight Louis. When a fighter manager uses the word "I" he always means his fighter, unless the "I" is used in a sentence like, "I'll collect your purse for last night's fight."

Hoffman's mention that Buddy, the baby Baer, is a hospital case comes as news here. Although come to think of it there was considerable talk around Jacobs Beach that he was suffering from stomach trouble.

Rack Presses Joe Balestri for Golf Lead

Ex-Champ Now but Two Shots Behind

D. C. Entry Has 153; Charley Fieco Second With 152 Despite Bad Round of 73

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Eddie Rack, a compositor on the McKeesport, Pa. Daily News, whose paper is sponsoring him in the tournament, began a bid for a third consecutive United Printcraft International Golf Association Championship yesterday at Beaver Dam by drawing within two strokes of the leader at the halfway mark of the 72-hole event.

Rack, winner in Pittsburgh in 1938 and Cincinnati last year, who needs one more victory to retire the Walter Hagen trophy, posted the lowest round of the day, a 76, and pulled within striking distance of the first day's co-leaders.

Joe Balestri, the host club champion and tournament favorite, slipped to 78 and added to his 73, the 151 total by the G. P. O. book-binder led the field. Second was the local public links player, Charles Fieco, who tied Balestri's opening 73 but slipped to 78 yesterday for 152. Rack's 77-78, 155 is third.

The low 13 players made the championship flight after the second round play and among those missing were two former champions. Claude Inman, the 1933 champ from Pontiac, Mich., was pushed into Class A, where he had no right to compete, with rounds of 87 and 84, one stroke over the qualifying limit. Fred Stringer, the District's 1934 champion, went haywire after a first day 78 and took 92 strokes for a 170 total, a score that barely made the championship grade. The other former champ who missed the top flight was Claude Radabaugh, of this city, who withdrew after an opening 92.

Monday night's big 5-hour bout ride down the Potomac took a lot out of the visiting Printcraft golfers and the scores were higher, as a rule. The players may get back in form today as yesterday's entertainment program was open, in preparation for the last two big days, today and tomorrow. Players were divided into five classes for the final rounds, 13 in the championship flight and a percentage in Classes A through D. Prizes will be equal in each division for the field of 129.

A three-way tie for fourth place in the championship class is monopolized by the District contingent, including President and former champion Edgar Merkle, with 80-79, 159, and Edgar Heimer, president of the Washington chapter, with 79-80. The third man was J. Kent, Boston, with 78-81, 159. He was out in 44

Umpire Misses Humor of Joke By MacFayden

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Aug. 6.—The Pittsburgh Pirates are still chuckling over Pitcher Danny MacFayden's little "joke" on Umpire Bill Klem yesterday.

When Klem called the other night, the bespectacled pitcher thought was third strike on Shortstop Billy Bragan a ball, the hurler tossed his glove high in the air.

Klem walked to the mound, where MacFayden removed his glasses, handed them to Bill, and said:

"Here, Bill, you take 'em. You really need 'em."

Klem quickly thumbed the pitcher out of the game and next day Danny received notice he had been fined $100.

"And it was the first time I ever was tossed out by an umpire," moaned the pitcher.

Miss Craig Wins In Invitation Net

Camille Craig, Evelyn Sheridan and Katherine Caul won matches in the Women's Invitation Tennis Tournament at the White Lot Courts yesterday.

Miss Craig defeated Ellen Burnham, 6-2, 6-0; Miss Sheridan beat Hilda Klockenber, 6-2, 6-1, and Miss Caul turned back Mary Rountree, 6-4, 6-2. Vivian Schaefer was leading Bess Condon, 6-1, and Rena Taylor was one set ahead of Grace Davis when rain halted their matches, which will be resumed today.

Today's pairings will bring together Zabett Price and Mary Hood; Ruth Britt and Katherine Caul; Rena Taylor and Grace Davis; Vivian Schaefer and Bess Condon. All matches will start at 5 o'clock.

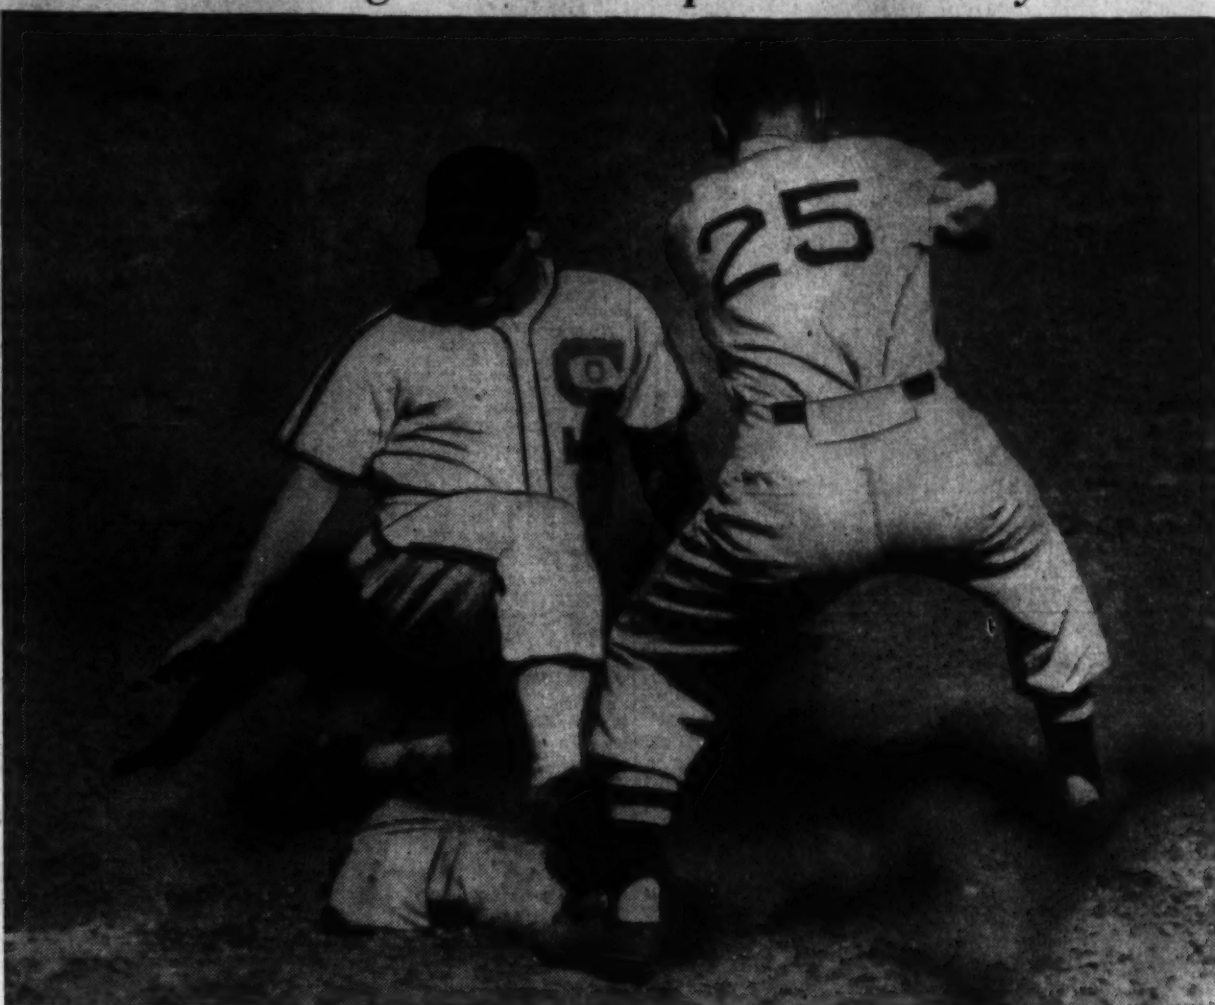

Ex-Yank Comes To End of Career

Toronto, Aug. 6 (AP)—Sad Sam Jones, veteran pitcher, who was for years a star with the New York Yankees, probably reached the end of his active career today when he was released by the Toronto Maple Leafs.

He left for his home in Whitfield, Mass.

Despite his years, Jones has pitched some good relief ball this season. In his final appearance yesterday he worked one inning without allowing a hit or a run.

Taft Wright Makes a Triple the Hard Way

Taft Wright, White Sox rightfielder and former Nat gardener, is shown recording a triple by hitting the dirt at third base in the seventh of the first game against Cleveland yesterday. Ken Keltner, Indian hot corner man, is attempting to catch the Chisox runner with a throw from the outfield. Luke Appling scores for the Chisox on the play.

Boston Batters Three Pitchers in Nightcap; Miller Hits Homer

By International News Service

Philadelphia, Aug. 6.—Boston today swept a twin bill from the Phillies, winning the first game, 3 to 0, and the second game, 13 to 2, in the seventh of the season.

The Bees got two runs in the opener on Eddie Miller's second-inning homer and their last run on three singles and Max West's fly in the third. Manuel Salvo baffled the Phillies with four hits.

Boston battered three pitchers for 15 hits in the nightcap. They knocked Hoge out of the box with a five-run outburst in the seventh and Miller hit his second homer of the day in the ninth.

For the Bees it made their record six triumphs in their last eight games, and for the Phillies it stretched their losing streak to six in a row.

Dr. Anderson To Coach Grid All-Star Team

Iowa Mentor Victor In Nation-Wide Poll; Faces Packers Aug. 29

By International News Service

Chicago, Aug. 6.—Dr. Edward Anderson, football coach at the University of Iowa, will lead the College All-Stars against the Green Bay Packers at Soldier Field the night of August 29 in Chicago's seventh annual all-star game.

All five coaches, two of whom are on summer vacations, have accepted elections to the staff. They will report at Northwestern University in Evanston Sunday morning to compile a list of 67 All-Stars.

Anderson's assistants, also chosen by popular vote, will be E. (Bud) Wilson, of Princeton, who won the Eastern section of the poll; Lowell Dawson, of Tulane, winner in the Southern area; L. T. (Buck) Shaw, of Santa Clara, victor in the Pacific Coast returns; and Don Faurot, of Missouri, who will represent the Middle West territory outside the Western Conference.

Anderson, who gave up seven hits, but walked eight, filled the bases with two out in the last frame and McKain was summoned to pitch to Walter Judnick, striking him out.

Clintches Victory Detroit clinched the decision with a four-run outburst in the sixth which broke a 2-all deadlock and enabled the Tigers to go a half-game up on the Cleveland Indians, who divided an afternoon double-header with the Chicago White Sox.

Big Hank Greenberg opened the Tigers' sixth-inning rally with a double to deep right field. Rudy York, who clouted his twentieth homer of the season in the second stanza, drew a base on balls and Pinkney Higgins singled, hitting the bases.

Sullivan Hits Billy Sullivan broke the tie with a single to left, driving in Greenberg and York, and Higgins crossed the plate a moment later on a wild pitch by Bob Harris, Sullivan, who had moved to third on the heave, came in with Detroit's final tally on a long fly.

The other Tiger run was registered in the third on Barney Astor's single, Greenberg's walk and a double by York.

Before the Tiger uprising the Browns had evened the count at 2-all in the fourth on Rip Radcliff's single with the bases loaded as the result of two bases on balls and George McQuinn's two-bagger.

Chapman's Single in 7th Spoils Game

Rookie Just Misses Hall of Fame for 2d Time in Season; 2 Griffis Get Homers

By Shirley Povich

Post Staff Writer

Three thousand Griffith Stadium fans moaned as one in the seventh inning yesterday when Sam Chapman, of the Athletics, swatted a single into leftfield. It was the blow that separated young Sidney Hudson from a classic no-hit game.

Washington won the ball game, 11 to 0, which is considerably beside the point. The point is that Hudson, for the second time this season, was on the threshold of a hall-of-fame job only to be rudely jolted out of his little dream-world by Chapman's hit.

The customers were vibrantly aware that Hudson was pitching no-hit ball as the game moved into the seventh inning and with the crack of Chapman's bat, the sorrow in the stands was audible. The hit was clean—a line drive over Cecil Travis' head—and it vanished the customers' hopes of sitting in on Griffith Stadium's first no-hitter since Bobby Burke's feat of 1930.

Another Failure Six weeks ago, Hudson lost a more tragic bid for a no-hit game. At St. Louis in a night game, he carried his quest for a no-hit game to the ninth inning before Rip Radcliff sent his dreams crashing with a two-base hit.

Out there yesterday, the tall blond kid from the Class D Florida League dominated the proceedings completely. He moved easily through the early innings. He didn't strike out a batter, but he was cutting loose with a blazing fast ball that was bookending the A's nevertheless. His no-hit bid ruined, he settled down to pitch-hitless ball thereafter.

While his chances for a no-hit game were alive, the Nats responded nobly behind him with spectacular fielding. He helped himself to hold the A's hitters in the third inning with a clever play on Rubelling's slow infield hit, and in the fourth he collaborated with Jimmy Bloodworth to rob Dick Siebert of a hit. Bloodworth went far to the right for a one-hand pickup if Siebert's smash and Hudson scrambled over to first base to take a perfect throw for the out.

The Case galloped back to the centerfield wall to take a hit away from Hayes in the fifth inning, but Cecil Travis turned in the fielding gem of the afternoon when he cut down a homer by Travis in the sixth inning to preserve Hudson's no-hit to that point. Travis made a sensational one-hand pickup of Moses' fierce smash and got the runner at first base.

Only four men reached base against Hudson—Chapman and the trio who reached base in the second inning—two by walks and one on a fielder's choice.

The Nats were in a slugging mood against Buck Ross, slim Philadelphia right-hander, and they gave Hudson a commanding lead. In each of the first four innings, Manager Connie Mack permitted

Welsh Gains Net Semifinals Though Love-Set Streak Ends

Barney Beats Murphy in D. C. Tennis

Champion Loses

First Game in 57 in Tournament; Smith, Johnsen, Lynch Win

By Jack Munhall

Barney Welsh's sensational love-set streak was smashed yesterday after it extended to nine sets embracing 56 games, but the hard-hitting defending champion yielded the advance of the top seeded four to the semifinals of the District Men's Open Tennis championships at Edgemoor Club.

Lynch Hard Pressed

Third-seeded Hugh Lynch was hard pressed to eliminate sixth-seeded Jimmy Farris, 6-4, 6-4, 6-1. Alphonso Smith, ranked fourth, played smartly in routing Buddy Adair, 6-4, 6-2. Dave Johnsen, Middle Atlantic titleholder and seeded second, won two matches, completing his postponed engagement with Bill Breeze, and then romping over Frank Shore, 6-0, 6-1. This was one of the worst beatings Shore ever absorbed in District tournament competition. Johnsen beat Breeze, 8-6, 6-4, in a match that was resumed at the start of the thirteenth game of the second set, with Breeze serving, where it had been interrupted Monday by darkness. In a fitting climax to a battle that stands as the best of the tournament, Breeze yesterday fought off two match points before succumbing to Johnsen's fine cross-court placements.

Murphy, slight but surprisingly enduring, won the admiration of the gallery with his performance against Welsh. Thoroughly outclassed and even humiliated in the first set as he was unable to win a game from the get-go, Welsh, who played never flinching tennis, kept plugging and his tenacity paid dividends even though he lost.

Battle on Even Terms

Murphy, after winning the first game that Welsh dropped in four tournament matches, to reduce his second-set deficit to 1-2, fought Welsh on even terms the remainder of the set and had a great opportunity to win out. He led 5-4, but was unable to hold service in the tenth game.

A change of strategy whereby he softened his game to an attack that was practically all half-loops was a factor in Murphy's second-set surge. Welsh, who likes to capitalize on opponent's speed for his own terrific pace, seemed upset by the "patty-pat" tactics and was forced into many net errors. This was in direct contrast to Welsh's play in the first set when he netted only once and in all was guilty of but three errors.

Johnsen, getting the jump on Shore, never allowed his quarter-faults to get a foothold. In time at all Davis had taken a 3-0 advantage as Shore experienced trouble in adjusting his forehead chop to Johnsen's powerful flat drives and the match might as well have been over then. In the second set Shore, realizing he couldn't win began to clown and Johnsen from then on did nothing but sharpen his net attack in anticipation of his tomorrow's match with Lynch.

Today's schedule lists one singles match, a semifinals between Welsh and Smith, and a pair of third round doubles which will send the winners into the quarterfinals. Lynch and Johnsen, defending champions, meet Breeze and Adair, and Farris and Bill Howard engage Shore and Ricky Willis.

Softballers Go Back Home—Now Expect Recovery

Softballers of Senate Beer, local champions, think they have the solution to their collapse in competition this season. They've moved their practice sessions back to Parkview Playground.

For six years Senate practiced at Parkview, winning four city titles in that space. Every member of the team was born and reared within stone's throw of the playground. Then, at the start of the 1940 season, it was decided to carry on all drill at Raymond Playground, a few blocks away.

The result was disastrous—according to Senate players. They lost the Middle Atlantic title and many of their intercity matches. Now they're back at Parkview, however, and working hard for another city championship tournament. They think it's in the bag now.

Dr. Anderson Named Star Coach

Anderson succeeded Elmer Layden, of Notre Dame, as head coach. His other predecessors were Bo McMillin, 1936; Charles (Gus) Doran, 1937; Bernie Bierman, 1938; Frank Thomas, 1939, and the late Noble Kizer, 1940.

Anderson was selected by the late Walter Eckersall as an All-American end when he was a running mate of Roger Miley at Notre Dame. His first coaching job was at Columbia College (now Loras), of Dubuque, Iowa. He left there in 1924 for a similar position at De Paul University in Chicago.

Anderson accepted an offer to become head football coach at Holy Cross College in 1933 and remained there until moving to Iowa City a year ago. At Holy Cross, Anderson had a record of 47 victories, seven defeats and four ties.

Anderson was nominated for the mythical honor of "Coach of the Year" as the result of Iowa's sensational play last season. "Buck" Shaw, winner of the Pacific Coast vote, was a teammate of Anderson's at Notre Dame.

Van Horn Bows In Eastern Net Upset, 6-0, 6-3

Hal Surface Defeats Problem Child; Bundy Paces Women's Side

By the Associated Press

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 6.—Welby Van Horn, of Los Angeles, last year's boy wonder of tennis and this year's problem child, was knocked out of the Eastern Gross Court Championships today in the second round by Hal Surface, Kansas City veteran, 6-0, 6-3.

Surface, who is ranked twelfth nationally, eight runs below Van Horn, required but 30 minutes to dispose of his opponent. Hal scored 14 consecutive points in the first set and finished it by capturing 12 of the last 14 rallies.

Van Horn tallied momentarily at the beginning of the second set, cracking Surface's service and holding his own for a 2-0 advantage. Surface squared it at 2-2, broke through Welsh again for a 5-3 edge and won his own service at love for the decision.

Van Horn's exit was the only surprise of the day. Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, the defending champion, disposed of Ronald Lubin, Los Angeles, 7-5, 6-2, while Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, eliminated Larry Dee, another Los Angeles, 6-3, 6-0. Hank Prusoff, of Seattle, defeated his doubles partner, George Toley, of Los Angeles, 5-7, 9-7, 6-4.

Another incident upset was averted when Gil Hunt, of Washington, D. C., rallied to defeat Alex Carver, of Wynnewood, Pa., 7-5, 6-8, 6-4.

In the women's division, the important California players enjoyed a banner day. Dodo Bundy, newly crowned Maidstone Club champion, scored an impressive 6-1, 6-0 conquest over Virginia Adler, of New York, to lead the advance into the third round. Sarah Palfray, of Reno, Nev., ousted Barbara Bradley, of Los Angeles, 6-2, 6-1.

Virginia Wolfenden, of San Francisco, blanked Elizabeth Haas, of Bronxville, N. Y.; Pauline Betz, of Los Angeles, former national indoor champion, brushed past Joy Hartman, of Pittsburgh, 6-1, 6-1. The third round brackets were completed when Gracy Wheeler, of Santa Monica, overcame Mary Arnold, of Los Angeles, 6-3, 6-3.

The two leaders hold an eight-stroke margin over Virginia Ingram, Chicago, who used 81 strokes for a 164. One stroke further back is Mrs. Dan Chandler, of Dallas, Tex., who had an 83 today, and Mary Agnes Wall, of Menominee, Mich., who had an 85. Miss Wall was second yesterday with an 80.

Other low scorers include Beatrice Barrett, of Minneapolis, 84, 83-167; Phyllis Otto, Omaha, Neb., 84, 83-167; Eleanor Budley, Chicago, 84, 84-168; Dorothy Foster, Springfield, Ill., 85, 86-175; and Joanne Cline, Bloomington, Ill., 85, 87-182. The third round is scheduled Wednesday, with the final 18 set for Thursday.

The record for the event is 307 strokes, set by Miss Hicks a year ago.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 6.—Racing returned to the foot of the Knobly Mountains today with a crowd of 8,000 hanging off the rafters of the trim turf plant of the Cumberland Fair Association. As has been the case since the start of the minor track season, wagering continued to be of record proportions. Despite the fact that some of the second thinkers failed to buy tickets, betting was going at a pace far ahead of last year. A cooling breeze came up the Potomac Valley and made the day fairly comfortable for the customers.

The finish of the feature race, the Col. W. H. Robertson Purse, proved one betting of the first day of the meeting. W. R. Roberts' Irish Moon and Mrs. A. Brown's Statement dove into the imaginary wire as a team. The Jones camera aided the judges in separating them and favored Irish Moon.

The two that figured in the lip finish came from far back in the field. The start saw Mrs. N. E. Stanton's Buttermilk drive to the front with A. L. Leith's Buddy Al pressing the pace. Kena Post, the favorite, was third as the field placed the stands for the first time on the dash of 5/16 furlongs. With the race half over, Irish Moon came through between horses to get to the front and Jockey W. Kelley never stopped working on the old mare thereafter.

Irish Moon finally shook a bid of Kena Post but found a new rival in Statement, which had come from far back along the rail. The two hooked up in a duel with 15 yards to go and Kelley just wouldn't let the old mare to give up.

Hugh O'Donovan's Tam O'Shanter scored a length victory in the day's steeplechase after the riding of Jockey N. Brooks the veteran gelding came from behind to force R. C. Waple's War Port into second money. Rouge, which shared the heavy betting with the winner, was third. War Port ran away with the early stages of the race, having a lead of ten lengths between calls. When the real test came, however, War Port could not resist the drive of Tam O'Shanter. The winner paid $5.40 in the role of favorite.

The daily double of $26.20 was cashed by 176 ticket holders. Mrs. M. R. Waugh's Pops Sister came from the rear of the field to win the first race by three lengths. The second race was won by the favorite, H. Tabler's Blue Prelude, under strong handling by Jockey Buddy Root, barely failed to take a head decision from the runner-up, Mrs. R. E. Reigh's Terence in the second race. Pops Sister paid $7.40 and Blue Prelude paid $5.20 in the individual betting.

Russians Sign U.S. Pact, Make Reservations

Won't Guarantee Terms if Defense Restrictions Continue

The United States and Russia renewed their annual trade agreement yesterday but with a Russian reservation that the Soviet Union would not guarantee to carry out all terms of the pact unless this country relaxes defense export restrictions.

The agreement, the fourth in as many years, sets forth that the Soviet Union plans to purchase at least $40,000,000 of American products during the next 12 months.

The stipulation was contained in an appended note signed by I. Mikoyan, commissar for foreign trade, who said his government was not in a position to purchase that much goods if the United States export restrictions should make it difficult for his country to satisfy its needs.

He referred to licensing restrictions imposed by President Roosevelt on exports of machinery, machine tools and other equipment which Russia buys heavily. Soviet Ambassador Constantin A. Oumansky protested the restrictions.

Aside from the reservation, the pact is identical with the one that expired yesterday. The United States continues to accord Russian commerce most favored nation treatment, with a reservation regarding coal.

The first United States-Russian trade pact was signed in 1937. There had been some doubt of a renewal this year, due to a State Department denunciation of Russia's bloodless conquest of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania as "predatory."

A TIMELY TIP TO TRUCK USERS

MODERNIZE YOUR TRUCKING EQUIPMENT NOW AT today's low prices

CHEVROLET TRUCKS LEAD IN SALES..

because they lead in economy, dependability and value!

TRUCK OWNERS WANT FACTS...CHEVROLET GIVES Certified Proof

On the longest test run ever conducted under the supervision of the A.A.A., a stock Chevrolet 1 1/2-ton truck tested in a marvelous performance record. These facts are clearly outlined in a booklet titled "Say Who?" You may obtain it from Chevrolet dealers or by writing to Chevrolet Motor Division, General Motors Sales Corp., General Motors Building, Detroit, Mich.

Chevrolet trucks lead in sales because they have the most desirable balance of power, economy and durability—power to do the job well, economy to do the job at low cost, and durability to stay on the job. That all adds up to value—exceptional value that has kept Chevrolet trucks out in front in sales—leading again in 1940, as they have led year after year. Consider modernizing some of your trucking equipment now—all models and types of Chevrolet trucks are still available at today's low price level.
